

OSSIAN SWEET HOUSE

African American physician Ossian Sweet and his wife, Gladys, purchased this house in May 1915. When the Sweets moved into their home on September 6, white residents who objected to blacks moving into the neighborhood formed a crowd on the street. The next day hundreds of people converged on the corner of Charlevola and Garland Streets intent on driving the Sweets from their home. The mob threw rocks and bricks at the house while the Sweets and nine others took refuge inside. In the evening shots rang out and a white man was killed. The police charged the people inside the Sweet house with murder. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People hired attorney Clarence Darrow, who argued that people, regardless of their race, have a right to protect their homes.

Historical Marker #100, erected by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Inc., in 1967. The text is a reproduction of the original text.

Ossian House:

The Old Devil Donald McRae, 2009-06-01 Clarence Darrow was one of the most legendary and influential trial lawyers the world has ever seen Famous for his ability to turn seemingly unwinnable cases his way through his oratory and his uncanny skill at reading the mood of a jury he was a man whose work inspired impassioned campaigns against the death penalty as well as lavish Hollywood movies But despite his success he also had a troubled life outside the court and some of his most famous cases came after he himself had been put on trial Now award winning writer Donald McRae revisits the three greatest trials which secured Darrow's near mythic reputation and brings them vividly to life The public themes which Darrow confronted still resonate powerfully today sex and murder religion and science racism the media and the law Written with great intimacy drama and immediacy this is a sweeping story which offers piercing insight into one of the most towering and controversial personalities of the twentieth century Detroit Water Pollution Control System Segmented
