Interviews with Independent Book Publishers in the Pacific Northwest and British Columbia

Jerome Gold

"I don't think there's much to come out of this thing. They need information and inspiration and want to see the publishing scene from the inside, independent publishers..." — Barbara Wilson. "I don't know if there was ever a moment when I really said yes, I am going to do this. It was really kind of just one thing led to another. But, and then, as you said, I kind of said, well I might not like it very much, it just that I was going along with it." — Ruth Gosselin. "Yes, what really drove why?" I mean, what was the impetus of her writing anything...? — Jane-Louise Greenhouse. "The impetus is always to have enough resources to pay the bills without totally bogging the books you really want to do." — Scott McFarlane. "You have a problem with some critical academics pursuing, literature, and taking away from the published (or just) and thinking the consequences of them? — Susan C. Clarke. "I think there are many, many very good writers who are doing some very good work and who are never getting to the publisher." — Jerome Gold. "Well, basically, I give a lot of advice... I'm not in the business of making books. This is the business of publishing books... when you look at the scene of a writer, you're looking at the end of the pipeline, not at the source." — Eric Lader. "The relationship between authors and publishers is not a free-for-all. It's an adversarial relationship. The writers have to get their work done and have enough to do for them. It's not adversarial, just it's a relationship." — Margaret Stewart. "One has to have a good relationship with publishers of an adversarial relationship between author and publisher. This is a, first, that can be both ways, for the author, before becoming a publisher, I had my own business in which I worked as publisher with companies and myself. But that's a more recent thing." — Robert McFarlane. "...one of the reasons for failure and success goes on as badly as they are successful." — Scott McFarlane. "It's what was somewhat ironic when I got involved in this, that it was paper after paper, as in the industry, it was kind of acknowledged that you wouldn't do it for money, because there wasn't a lot of it. And you wouldn't do it if you didn't want to work hard because the work was hard. And you wouldn't do it if you weren't stable, because it was a really kind of thing to do. When you look at the kind of people who put down in this work, they're generally very committed and energetic." — Susan Stewart.
