The Immutability of God in the Theology of Hans Urs Von Balthasar Gerard F. Women in Eighteenth-Century Scotland Deborah Simonton,2016-12-05 The eighteenth century looms large in the Scottish imagination It is a century that saw the doubling of the population rapid urbanisation industrial growth the political Union of 1707 the Jacobite Rebellions and the Enlightenment events that were intrinsic to the creation of the modern nation and to putting Scotland on the international map The impact of the era on modern Scotland can be seen in the numerous buildings named after the luminaries of the period Adam Smith David Hume William Robertson the endorsement of Robert Burns as the national poet hero the preservation of the Culloden battlefield as a tourist attraction and the physical geographies of its major towns Yet while it is a century that remains central to modern constructions of national identity it is a period associated with men Until recently the history of women in eighteenth century Scotland with perhaps the honourable exception of Flora McDonald remained unwritten Over the last decade however research on women and gender in Scotland has flourished and we have an increasingly full picture of women's lives at all social levels across the century. As a result, this is an appropriate moment to reflect on what we know about Scottish women during the eighteenth century, to ask how their history affects the traditional narratives of the period, and to reflect on the implications for a national history of Scotland and Scottish identity. Divided into three sections covering women's intimate, intellectual, and public lives, this interdisciplinary volume offers articles on women's work, criminal activity, clothing, family, education, writing, travel, and more. Applying tools from history, art, anthropology, cultural studies, and English literature, it draws on a wide range of sources, from the written to the visual, to highlight the diversity of women's experiences and to challenge current male-centric historiographies.
