

Comparative Foreign Policy of Morocco and America

Topic: Politics & Government | Words: 1620 | Pages: 6

Introduction

The U.S. foreign policy consists of different sets of rules that guide the manner in which the nation relates with the international community. These rules which are made up of international treaties, protocols and conventions, general and specific regional agreements are aimed at addressing the various aspects of human interests in the U.S. and their respective foster nation. In nation that pledges to embrace the same rules and views of the U.S. concerning social, economic and political approaches in their relation to international activities is allowed to build ties with the U.S.

America continues to play a major role in the worlds' social economic development; almost every nation has its embassy in the U.S. territory. As such, its influence in the modern activities around the globe is relatively not arguable. Approximately 3.3% of the worlds' wealth is concentrated in the United States major cities. The U.S. foreign policies are therefore formed with the general objective of protecting the country's interest against the international community. All foreign policies in the U.S. are legalized by the President after going through a number of procedures.
