Physiological Limitations and the Genetic Improvement of Symbiotic Nitrogen Fixation F. O'Gara, S. Manian, J.J. Drevon, 2012-12-06 Rhizobium species involved in root nodule formation on legume plants are one of the best known groups of microorganisms. The Rhizobium-legume symbiosis continues to be of strategic importance, particularly in the context of food production. As the world population grows, it is also necessary to have new developments taking place in crop improvement. The development and application of new technologies in biological sciences over the past number of years have made the entire area of plant-microbial interaction an exciting and challenging research area to be involved in. In view of the importance of symbiotic nitrogen fixation, it is not surprising that it still represents one of the priority areas for commercial development in agricultural biotechnology. Since this symbiosis involves an association between procaryotic and eucaryotic partners, it requires, of necessity, a co-ordinated and interdisciplinary approach. It was in this spirit that this international conference was organised. The scientific programme was designed to focus on physiological limitations affecting symbiotic nitrogen fixation and the potential for overcoming such limitations using genetic technologies. Participants were drawn from contractants of the EEC DGVI Energy in Agriculture nitrogen fixation programme. The scientific programme was also supplemented with invited scientists from Europe and North America to provide appropriate expertise on the various conference topics.

Biotechnology: Potentials and Limitations S. Silver, 2012-12-06 hurdle will be in the latter area. The technological hurdles will be formidable but will not limit what happens once the basic ideas are available: the technology will be developed. The unique part of biotechnology will be to imagine what the possibilities are. There was a discussion in several of the groups on the problems of introducing a novel science into a social and economic context. What biotechnologists are learning on this matter is not novel, although that does not make it any less important or difficult. People in the development of electronics and computers in the pharmaceutical industry and in many other types of industry that have grown from university research have had to face these problems in the past It is the old situation of having to reinvent the wheel again and again There is one aspect on which biotechnology seems to have handled this inherent difficulty better than some of our predecessor technologies the people in the biotechnology companies by and large take a rather academic approach to free communication with one another at meetings such as this and open publication of many of their basic findings in the literature This seems unique and certainly is different from the experience of the recent Silicone Valley Industry which in other ways tries to emulate an academic environment but not in open and free publication
