By Margaret Tolpe
World Staff Writer

Professor and consultant John Lamberton says sociology plays a big part in the wherewithals and dealings of the business world.

As an Oklahoma State University instructor, he teaches students how to see the everyday world in a sociological perspective. As a local business consultant, he tries to help people and companies improve through communication and interaction.

"I worked with a woman who was hired as a representative of Williams Pipe Line Co.," Lamberton said. "She was a forestry expert. She knew all about trees and land and how they should be used, but she didn't know how to work with the residents."

"Her job was to talk to neighbors over a wetlands area to let them know what Williams was doing in the area. She told me she had no idea how to talk to the people."

With some coaching and a few phone calls to several people in regulatory positions, Lamberton came up with ideas on how to approach the residents, listen to their complaints and answer their needs.

As a result, Lamberton said, the Williams representative finished her work in record time.

"The root of most business problems is usually attorney fees," he said. "That's because people don't have the skills needed to understand the needs of others."

"A prime example is the Superfund cleanup. The consultant costs have not been for the cleanup, but for time in court."

Lamberton's consulting usually starts with a meeting with executives to find out what the company needs. Sometimes he is hired to start a company's communications with another country, such as teaching executives how to deal with Japanese guests or how to approach man-facturing techniques with new businesses in Peru. Other times he may be hired to find easier ways for management to communicate with laborers rather than through complaints or suggestion boxes.

"My way is to go into a company, look around and then listen," he said. "There is one thing people love to talk about and they are all experts on — themselves. If you can get a person to open up, you can learn most of what you need to know."

"A marketing employee has a different perspective than a laborer. Each job requires a special perspective, and you have to teach people how to interact with each other and the customer."

Lamberton interviews employees, supervisors, executives and customers and then holds meetings to see how groups interact. Upon completing these studies, he offers an analysis of the company's current status, its problems and ways to solve them.

The solution, he said, may be anything from his own consulting to finding outside help. The company may need something as simple as new lighting, or it may need to be completely overhauled because of excessive problems, including money, he said.

"Even though a company may be as efficient as possible, one employee may be having problems that are dragging everyone else down," he said. "Bad employees usually get weeded out, but it may take a company a long time to do that."

"You have to get annual sociology checkups, just like you check up on everything else in your company."

Putting Sociology To Work:

Putting Feminism to Work Suzanne Egan, 2020-11-23 This book explores the place of feminism and uptake of trauma in contemporary work against sexual violence Egan presents a refreshing alternative position on arguments about the co-optation or erasure of feminism within institutionalized professionalized services for sexual assault victims Using original research on Australian sexual assault services Putting Feminism to Work effectively illustrates how feminist concepts and ideas have become routinized in contemporary services and enacted in daily practices with survivors and communities The book engages with yet resists the notion that feminist engagement with knowledge trauma based in psychiatry and clinical psychology is incompatible with feminism or inevitably reduces sexual violence to a problem of individual healing Indeed Egan argues that the productive ways practitioners integrate neurobiological understandings of trauma into their work suggests rich possibilities for reintroducing a non essentialist biology of the body into feminist theories of sexual violence Scholars students and practitioners working in the fields of violence against women sociology women s and gender studies health social work and policy studies as well as the emerging field of sociologically informed trauma studies will find this book of interest

Our Studies, Ourselves Barry Glassner, Rosanna Hertz, 2003 What motivates a lifelong scholarly pursuit and how do one s studies inform life outside the academy Sociologists who live in families but also study families who go to work but also study work who participate in communities but also try to understand communities have an especially intimate relation to their research Growing up poor struggling as a woman in a male dominated profession participating in protests against the Vietnam War facts of life influence research agendas individual understandings of the world and ultimately the shape of the discipline as a whole

Barry Glassner and Rosanna Hertz asked twenty two of America's most prominent sociologists to reflect upon how their personal lives influenced their research and vice versa how their research has influenced their lives In this volume the authors reveal with candor and discernment how world events political commitments and unanticipated constraints influenced the course of their careers They disclose how race class and gender proved to be pivotal elements in the course of their individual lives and in how they carry out their research Faced with academic institutions that did not hire or promote persons of their gender race sexual orientation or physical disability they invented new routes to success within their fields Faced with disappointments in political organizations to which they were devoted they found ways to integrate their disillusionment into their research agendas While some of the contributors radically changed their political commitments and others saw more stability none stood still An intimate look at biography and craft these snapshots provide a fascinating glimpse of the sociological life for colleagues other academics and aspiring young sociologists The collection demonstrates how inequalities and injustices can be made into motors for scholarly research which in turn have the power to change individual life courses and entire societies
