Abstract: Quantitative methods are in frequent use in modern accounting research. The evidence may be found e.g. in the journals like "Journal of Accounting Research", "European Accounting Review", "Review of Quantitative Finance and Accounting" or in the Accounting Research Network in SSRN base. Paper presents a brief survey of research areas and statistical-econometric approaches in accounting research. Particular reference goes to research on corporate disclosure. Methodological component of the paper includes remarks on the use of binary response models with choice-based and matched samples as well as comments on the sample selection approaches.

Keywords: accounting research, corporate disclosure, binary response, choice-based samples, matched samples, sample selection.

INTRODUCTION

Paper presents the brief survey as well as some methodological remarks on quantitative methods used in accounting research. Let us begin with the question of "how probable is probable in accounting?". Documents and practice of accounting principles like IAS (International Accounting Standards) or IFRS (International Financial Reporting Standards)<sup>1</sup> quite distinctly call for the use of probability in delivering statements like e.g. the auditors' opinion on some possible outcomes of company's activities.

Table 1 lists the various uses of the language of probability in accounting. There are 27 shades of probability listed here: from "virtually certain" to "not genuine". How do we decide which of the 27 categories should be used in the statement? It is evident that some quantitative advice on how to find the relevant
