Component 1: Exploring the Media

Focus areas:
Media language
Representation
Media contexts

PRODUCT CONTEXT

- The Man with the Golden Gun is a James Bond film released on 19 December 1974, starring Roger Moore as 007. This was only Moore's second appearance as the fictional MI6 agent.
- Based on a book of the same name, written by Ian Fleming, the film was produced by the British company Eon (Everything or Nothing) Productions and distributed by United Artists. The film was created with an estimated $7 million budget and grossed over $97 million at the world wide box office.
- To reflect the popularity of the Martial Arts film genre, with the rise of stars such as Bruce Lee and Jackie Chan, there were several Kung Fu scenes and the film was filmed predominantly in Asia, having being shot in Hong Kong, Thailand and Macau.
- The artwork for poster itself was produced by artist and illustrator Robert McGinnis.

PART 1: STARTING POINTS – Media language

Historical Context:

Prior to the 1990s, illustrations were much more commonly used on film posters due to the limited technology that was available.

The film was set in the middle of the 1973 energy crisis, when the oil producing Arab nations proclaimed an oil embargo causing an oil crisis which had both short and long-term effects across on politics and the economy across the globe. This is hinted at through the poster's iconography of the power plant in the lower left corner and the energy beam directed at Bond.

Consider the codes and conventions of media language and how elements of media language influence meaning:

- Typically, film posters are very visual and rely on images and limited text to promote the film. The images need to give the audience an idea of the film genre and hint at the narrative – here, rather than just one dominant image, there is so much going on that the reader is expected to work through the images to understand the film's plot.
- The central image is a mid-shot of James Bond, smartly dressed holding a gun across his body. The dominance of his image suggests he is the film's protagonist and so probably a 'good guy'. According to Vladimir Propp's theory, he would be considered the 'hero'.
- Bond's attire connotes business and professionalism and the gun, an iconic part of Bond's 'uniform', signifies danger and action.
- Bond is looking directly at the audience, seemingly making eye contact. The intensity of his stare and the lack of a smile could connote how seriously he expects to be taken and that he appears calm despite the chaos surrounding him. This informs the audience of one of his great strengths, his ability to keep his composure in any situation.
- A common convention for film posters is to have the actor's name(s) placed prominently as another way to entice the audience. Roger Moore had become a household name after starring in the well-known TV series The Saint and playing Bond in the previous film, Live and Let Die, so his name is placed directly above Bond's image to reinforce the link.
- The title of the film appears with the name of the author who wrote the books (on which the films are based) at the bottom of the poster. The
