Organ space SSI

Treatment

open surgical wound, antibiotics for cellulitis or sepsis

Source control, antibiotics for sepsis

Antibiotics given for the purpose of preventing infection when infection is not present but the risk of postoperative infection is present (see next slide)

Use prophylactic antibiotics

Surgical Site Prevention

Optimize oxygen tension

Avoid shaving with a razor

Pre-operative Shaving

- Shaving the surgical site with a razor induces small skin lacerations
- potential sites for infection
- disturbs hair follicles which are often colonized with S. aureus
- Risk greatest when done the night before
- Patient education
- be sure patients know that they should not do you a favor and shave before they come to the hospital!

Perioperative Glucose Control

Patients with a blood sugar > 300 mg/dL during or within 48 hours of surgery had more than 3X the likelihood of a wound infection

Maintain normal blood glucose

Maintain normal blood temperature

Management Of Surgical Infections:

Source Control Moshe Schein, John C. Marshall, 2013-11-11 Source control is the key to the management of surgical infections Surgical decision making is based on the marriage of evidence from clinical studies inferences from biology and the elusive component of surgical experience this book combines these three elements We have recruited an international group of authors who are acknowledged leaders in the field of surgical infectious diseases We have challenged them to integrate evidence with experience and an understanding of biology so as to create overviews that will help the clinician who must make the difficult decisions And we have kept them honest by asking a second group of equally eminent commentators to provide supporting or alternative views in essence to recreate the kind of dialogue that takes place between clinicians discussing a difficult problem This is THE manual for the authoritative management of surgical infections Infections in Surgery Massimo Sartelli, Raul Coimbra, Leonardo Pagani, Kemal Rasa, 2021-01-29 Although most clinicians are aware of the problem of antimicrobial resistance most also underestimate its significance in their own hospital The incorrect and inappropriate use of antibiotics and other antimicrobials as well as poor prevention and poor control of infections are contributing to the development of such resistance Appropriate use of antibiotics and compliance with infection prevention and control measures should be integral aspects of good clinical practice and standards of care However these activities are often inadequate among clinicians and there is a considerable gap between the best evidence and actual clinical practice In hospitals cultural determinants influence clinical practice and improving behaviour in terms of infection prevention and antibiotics prescribing practice remains a challenge Despite evidence supporting the effectiveness of best practices many clinicians fail to implement them and evidence based processes and practices that are known to optimize both the prevention and the treatment of infections tend to be underused Addressing precisely this problem this volume offers an essential toolkit for all surgeons and intensivists interested in improving their clinical practices Management of Surgical Infections Morris D.
