This open access book focuses on the downstream element of PFM that is how public organisations utilise public resources. It argues that improvements in PFM IC will only flow from a recognition that what really matters is the quality of management. Management reform is an essential precondition to the successful implementation of many new techniques. Only when a managerial capacity exists willing to take advantage of the opportunities created by such technical developments is it beneficial to pursue them. The benefits of PFM IC flow from an improved quality of management. Despite enormous efforts reform of public financial management and internal control PFM IC in developing and transition economy countries has not been particularly successful in improving the quality of public service delivery and the use of public resources. This book outlines why this is and suggests a new approach. The analysis set out in this book is particularly relevant especially given limited national budgets and squeezed international aid budgets These management changes include to the political official relationships to management structures to budgetary and accounting arrangements and to the relationships between particularly the ministry of finance and other ministries They require the delegation of operational management developments in financial management and in accountability arrangements and a reconsideration of personnel policies penalty and sanction arrangements Managerial training for the civil service will be a key requirement Reform may impact upon traditional cultural practices These changes are all inter related and should be coordinated

The Value to Management of Using the Internal Audit Function as a Management Training Ground Joseph V. Carcello, 2017 This study examines how using the internal audit function as a management training ground MTG impacts manager's reliance on internal auditor recommendations While prior research suggests that using internal audit as a MTG can adversely affect financial reporting quality external audit fees and internal audit efficiency many internal audit functions use this practice We study how this practice influences another important stakeholder senior management Based on survey results of 355 chief audit executives CAEs we find that CAEs perceive senior management to be more likely to use recommendations from MTG internal auditors than non MTG internal auditors To bolster the validity of these findings and provide evidence as to why this is the case we conduct two experiments with 147 executives 47 MTurk workers with an average of about 25.13 years of experience The experimental results confirm the survey results We also find that the key reason why managers rely more on MTG than non MTG recommendations is that MTG internal auditors are perceived to have more natural ability which is a key driver in manager's reliance decision Taken together our research provides the first empirical evidence that there are positive consequences to using the internal audit function as a MTG in contrast to the negative consequences previously reported
