

In Sophie K. Ross's book they tell us that there is power in grief because it is wild; that it cannot and must not be contained. Grief stops us in our tracks and makes collusion with capitalist logic impossible, it may leave us unable to do anything but exist.
Indeed, we might grieve all that we have lost due to colonial capitalism, as well as living beings, we grieve the lives we are unable to live. Grief can bring our awareness to what matters most, and in doing so be a source of radical intimacy and transformation.
Grief, in this way, is not a solitary feeling.
