White, 2009 The Copper River Delta of Southcentral Alaska is the largest contiguous wetland on the North American Pacific coast and supports economically important commercial and recreational fisheries for all five species of Pacific salmon. Some biological factors influencing salmon populations in the Copper River Delta have been previously investigated but little effort has been made to establish baseline information on freshwater aquatic communities in the region. In an effort to provide area managers with aquatic community measures for future comparisons, benthic invertebrate community structure was contrasted among twelve streams representing six stream channel types common to the area and important to salmonid development. In general, invertebrate density, taxa richness, and diversity were greatest in channel types designated as high potential for salmonids. Taxonomic and functional feeding group measures show that macroinvertebrate communities of Copper River Delta streams sampled are representative of early successional communities.

Government Reports Announcements & Index, 1996 Pogo Gold Mine, 2003 A Guidebook for Integrated Ecological Assessments Mark E. Jensen, Patrick S. Bourgeron, 2012-09-07 Ecosystem management requires a planning and decision making process that places land use in its appropriate ecological context. Because ecological assessments must be conducted at various spatial scales and across jurisdictional boundaries, approaches to assessment must be compatible and consistent with each other. A Guidebook for Integrated Ecological Assessment analyzes methods and provides standards and protocols for assessment and the integration of data.
