Diagnosis and Management of Endocrine-related Tumors Richard J. Santen, Andrea Manni, 2012-12-06 Patients with a variety of tumors present to the physician because of clinical manifestations of hormones secreted in excess This phenomenon attracted the investigative interest of such pioneers as Harvey Cushing who recognized that pituitary tumors may cause acromegaly and Charles Mayo who associated hypertension with adrenal medullary neoplasms Current interest in endocrine related tumors has intensified because of the explosive development of new methodology for their study Specific measurements of secretory products hybridization assays to identify products of genomic translation and quantitative assessment of tissue hormone receptors have provided means of characterizing and precisely following patients with endocrine related tumors Treatments based upon these advances are rapidly proliferating The current volume attempts to synthesize much of this recent information with the goal of providing a sound basis for making clinical judgements regarding diagnosis and management Tumors of endocrine glandular tissues commonly confront practicing physicians with difficult management problems Several unique features of these tumors necessitate collaboration among various specialty disciplines in order to resolve these problems and to provide a high level of clinical care For example endocrine neoplasms secrete active hormones or hormone precursors which produce clinical manifestations most familiar to endocrinologists Certain therapies such as radioactive iodine for thyroid cancer take advantage of the hormone responsiveness of these tumors to facilitate treatment These aspects require individuals trained in endocrinology to implement complex diagnostic and therapeutic maneuvers
