This is placing new demands on finance ministries to increase the resources channeled into priority sectors as defined by national frameworks and poverty reduction strategies. This in turn entails the creation of effective budgetary systems and improved public financial management as well as the management of donor resources. Managing Resources for Development is based upon the technical theme of the 2002 Senior Finance Officials Meeting held in London. Managing Rural Development

This book contributes to the discussion by using unique firm level data from the engineering industries in India and South Korea to chart the evolution of firms and industries during the liberalization process of the 1980s. By choosing contrasting case studies of the effects of liberalization on industrial performance, the authors draw lessons on the nature, timing and extent of state intervention required to foster internationally competitive firms in developing countries. The Journal of Developing

Areas, 1986 Managing to Empower Susan Holcombe, 1995 An estimated 13.18 million people die from hunger, malnutrition and poverty related causes every year.
