Literature Works grade 10 language English abstract Most of the time the content of a movie on TV or in cinema is based on the written word like a novel or an opera or a play Also short stories such as Million Baby have inspired movies very often The literary work of other writers serve as a main source of input often somehow giving the story a new twist In fact 85 percent of all Oscar winning films 95 percent of all miniseries and 70 percent all TV movies that win Emmy Awards are adaptations Why are adaptations so successful In this term paper I would like to answer this question Furthermore I will survey if for Million Baby the adaptation is its own heterocosm with its individual characters settings and events or if it is simply an imitation of the original I am going to investigate if the form of the original changes by adapting if the content does persist or if the source only serves as a hollow corpse Further this approach will try to give an answer to what is it that constitutes the transmuted and transferred content The film adaptation Million Dollar Baby was directed and starred by Clint Eastwood in 2004 with Hilary Swank and Morgan Freeman in the other title roles The screenplay of the film was written by Paul Haggis and based on the short story with the same name Million Baby by F X Toole which is to be found in his book Rope Burns Toole himself worked as a cut man in the ring where he had to patch up the boxer's injuries so he could continue fighting His expert knowledge and love to the sport can be very well experienced in his stories When the adaptation was criticised especially by disability right activists Eastwood stated that the film was about the American and that he distances himself from the characters and actions in the film He as a filmmaker is simply showing things as they are and not judging the decisions and operations of his figure
