This process of de secularization was marked by two leading characteristics on the one hand by the loss of that contact with physical reality through systematic observation which alone had given life to Greek natural science and on the other by a concentration of attention upon what were believed to be the superior realities of the spiritual world The consideration of these latter became so intense so detailed and systematic that there was little energy left among thinking men for anything else Baptist Commonwealth ,1901 The Prophecies of Isaiah ,1870 Sermons on passing seasons and events
