- The meeting of people in a common geographical setting is complexity.
 - Therefore, questions regarding the meeting of people who lived in the Americas prior to increased contact with Europeans have generated a lively debate.
 - The role of Native populations in the first increased contact with Europeans indicates not only the complexity of these societies but also the scale of suffering during the centuries that followed.
- Estimates of indigenous populations at contact range from 50 to 100 million – a factor of two difference.
 - Historians like Las Casas estimated that around 30 million people lived in Mesoamerica before Spanish guns and disease killed nearly all of them.
 - Other scholars, who note intense environmental disease as a cause of deaths, cannot say so unequivocally and instead a moderate debate.
 - Some population estimates were made, given as contact between and along the Andes, at estimates of 14 million north of Mesoamerica, indicated by Pizarro that 90 to 110 million Native people lived in the Americas at the time of Columbus's first voyage.
 - At 1.50 million people occupied the Amazon in 1492, as Pizarro estimated parts of the West Indian were as thickly populated as Europe and Asia.
 - At estimates of 10 to 15 million, one more estimate, more recent, is the "consensus."

STATISTICS AND PROBABILITY: A CONCISE COURSE

1. The first step in the process of the design of a new product is the identification of the market need. This is done by conducting market research, which involves gathering information about the needs and wants of potential customers.
2. The second step is the development of a concept. This involves creating a preliminary design that meets the identified market need. The concept is then refined through a series of iterations, taking into account feedback from potential customers and internal stakeholders.
3. The third step is the development of a prototype. This involves creating a physical model of the product that can be used to test the concept and gather feedback. The prototype is typically made from a material that is easy to work with and can be modified easily.
4. The fourth step is the development of a detailed design. This involves creating a complete set of drawings and specifications that define the product. The design is then reviewed and approved by internal stakeholders and external customers.
5. The fifth step is the development of a production plan. This involves determining the resources and processes needed to manufacture the product. The plan is then implemented, and the product is manufactured.

1. Small birds, suggested bym collectors as being endemic across the Atlantic coast and spread through the Western Hemisphere, north to south.
2. Some more birds, suggested during the West Coast of North and South America.
 - a. Others may have come across the Pacific Ocean.
 - b. By c. 18000 BCE our earliest, Native people had reached the southwestern corner of South America (present-day Chile), where humans were established.
3. A few years the knowledge, synthesis that indigenous peoples migrated they formed trading networks and shared culture. For example, Cahokiaans traded with the Aztecs and built their own empire.

1. Having introduced social institutions to protect my interest and demand, I might not sell anything and accompanying Native people to pursue the Atlantic Coast trade.
 - a. They may have not sailed inland southward to the site of present-day Athens, New York.
 - b. Climate change (geological time scale) destroyed most all the Viking settlements and associated trade institutions.
2. In 1492, Christopher Columbus landed in the Caribbean on his first voyage, probably initiated by native pressure and contacts with indigenous people in the north.
 - a. Indigents over the Atlantic Ocean increased rapidly as Europeans came (e.g., African, Spanish, and Portuguese) expanded the world economy. Columbus was motivated by personal European incentives.
 - b. African slaves shipped across the Atlantic to "manure" their demand for them.
 - a. Slavery became the basis of an agricultural system, especially for exports that fed the more than one continent, until the Civil War after the U.S. as the early 19th.
 - b. The institution of slavery gave played an important role in the development of slavery throughout the world, most notably in the U.S. South, as well as in the Civil War.

1. The phrase "Columbian Exchange" is introduced by anthropologist Alfred Wrigley in his book, On the Search for the Center to describe the transfer of biological materials between the Americas and the "Old World" during and after the voyages of Columbus.
2. This exchange included human beings (most obviously, as well as the plants and animals that crossed the oceans, with or without human intention).
 - A. Many humans arrived from Europe and Africa to the Americas, but a few Native Americans went back to Europe (some against their will).
 - B. Many more American crops, first lifted by Native Americans, made their way to Europe. Some of the best known are corn, potatoes, tomatoes, and tobacco.
 - C. Europeans and African plants made their way to the Americas as well.
3. While some aspects of the Columbian Exchange were beneficial, others were damaging to Native American peoples.
 - A. The exchange brought to the Americas a number of diseases. Because the Europeans had acquired, by long contact, often at great personal or commercial cost, immunity to such diseases, they did not realize until the great waves of disease had to all but have been their neighbors on their newly won killing grounds.
 - B. Europeans had also developed a degree of immunity to those diseases, the most of which were fatal. They did not realize until the great waves of disease had to all but have been their neighbors on their newly won killing grounds.
4. Labeled as a "bottle," the Columbian exchange was more beneficial to introducing Europeans than to Native Americans.
 - A. In his book Indian Crops and Native Society, anthropologist Professor Ruth Wattersford described how the influence of European gold and silver helped to build the empire of Spain and how Europeans' food products, such as potatoes and corn helped to increase European food.
 - B. According to Wattersford, 80% of the food harvested in the colonies was from native crops, while in Europe, 80% of the food was from native crops.
