Proceedings of the Second Eastern Native Grass Symposium , Restoration of Longleaf Pine Ecosystems ,2005
Longleaf pine Pinus palustris ecosystems once occupied 38 million ha in the Southeastern United States occurring as forests woodlands and savannas on a variety of sites ranging from wet flatwoods to xeric sandhills and rocky mountainous ridges. Characterized by an open parklike structure, longleaf pine ecosystems are a product of frequent fires facilitated by the presence of fallen pine needles and bunchgrasses in the understory. Timber harvest, land conversion to agricultural and other nonforest uses, and alteration of fire regimes greatly reduced longleaf pine ecosystems until only 1.2 million ha remained in 1995. Longleaf pine ecosystems are among the most species-rich ecosystems outside the tropics. However, habitat loss and degradation have caused increased rarity of many obligate species. The lack of frequent surface fires and the proliferation of woody plants in the understory and midstory have greatly increased the risk of additional longleaf pine ecosystem losses from catastrophic fire. Because longleaf pine still exists in numerous small fragments throughout its range, it is reasonable to conclude that it can be restored. Restoration efforts now underway use physical, chemical, and pyric methods to reestablish the natural structure and function in these ecosystems by adjusting species composition, modifying stand structure, and facilitating ecological processes such as periodic fire and longleaf pine regeneration. The ecological, economic, and social benefits of restoring longleaf pine ecosystems include: 1) expanding the habitat available to aid in the recovery of numerous imperiled species; 2) improving habitat quality for many wildlife species; 3) producing greater amounts of high-quality longleaf pine timber products; 4) increasing the production of pine straw; 5) providing new recreational opportunities; 6) preserving natural and cultural legacies; and 7) creating a broader range of management options for future generations.

Globalization is not a new phenomenon, but it is posing new challenges to humans and natural ecosystems in the 21st century. From climate change to increasingly mobile human populations to the global economy, the relationship between humans and their environment is being modified in ways that will have long-term impacts on ecological health, biodiversity, ecosystem goods and services, population vulnerability, and sustainability. These changes and challenges are perhaps nowhere more evident than in island ecosystems. Buffeted by rising ocean temperatures, extreme weather events, sea level rise, climate change, tourism, population migration invasive species and resource limitations islands represent both the greatest vulnerability to globalization and also the greatest scientific opportunity to study the significance of global changes on ecosystem processes human environment interactions conservation environmental policy and island sustainability In this book we study islands through the lens of Land Cover Land Use Change LCLUC and the multi scale and multi thematic drivers of change In addition to assessing the key processes that shape and re shape island ecosystems and their land cover land use changes the book highlights measurement and assessment methods to characterize patterns and trajectories of change and models to examine the social ecological drivers of change on islands For instance chapters report on the results of a meta analysis to examine trends in published literature on islands a satellite image time series to track changes in urbanization social surveys to support household analyses field sampling to represent the state of resources and their limitations on islands and dynamic systems models to link socio economic data to LCLUC patterns The authors report on a diversity of islands conditions and circumstances that affect LCLUC patterns and processes often informed through perspectives rooted for instance in conservation demography ecology economics geography policy and sociology
