CONCERNED ABOUT THE

"We were just very impressed with her talent and her work ethic," says the executive producer Kevin Feige.

Working with Marvel had been a long-held dream for D'Acosta, but there would be no. The studio has tapped some regional directors over the years: Ryan Coogler, Yvonne Rainer, and others. But Feige, who has worked with D'Acosta on the TV show Black Panther, was the one who convinced her to take the job. "I was very nervous," she says. "I was very nervous about the pressure of being the first Black woman to direct a Marvel movie. But I was also very excited about the opportunity to work with Kevin Feige and the rest of the team. BUT IN 2017, when Marvel was on the hunt for a director for The Marvels, a young director came in to pitch her vision for the project to executives and producers. Her name was Nia D'Acosta. After a long wait, she landed the job. "I was very nervous about the pressure of being the first Black woman to direct a Marvel movie. But I was also very excited about the opportunity to work with Kevin Feige and the rest of the team. I was very nervous about the pressure of being the first Black woman to direct a Marvel movie. D'Acosta, who was on at the time, got the job, becoming not only Marvel's youngest director ever, but also the first Black woman to helm one of its films. "When I grew those roots, I really wanted to be a director," she says. "I was very nervous about the pressure of being the first Black woman to direct a Marvel movie. But I was also very excited about the opportunity to work with Kevin Feige and the rest of the team. I was very nervous about the pressure of being the first Black woman to direct a Marvel movie. When she signed on for The Marvels, D'Acosta had already worked on the set of Black Panther and Black Panther: Wakanda Forever.
