While we are looking back at a century of behavioral research on sex differences in cognition and emotion, sex differences have for a long time been disregarded as a confound in neuroscience.

Several researchers still argue that sex differences in cognition are overall small and negligible (Hyde and Linn, 1988, 2006; Hyde, 2005, 2006). Indeed the data so far are by no means consistent. These inconsistencies are to a large part attributable to small sample sizes and low power on the one hand and a large variation in methodologies on the other hand. This is even more true for studies on menstrual cycle and hormonal contraceptive dependent effects on the brain, as will be pointed out in this Research Topic (Pletzer and Kerschbaum, 2014; Sundström Poromaa and Gingsnell, 2014).

However, another reason that these inconsistencies still exist may also be that neuroscience, looking at the topic from the angle of political correctness, has refrained from studying sex differences in the brain in more detail. One major goal of this Research Topic is to change this view and look at the topic from a different angle:

Women don't have to be like men to be treated as equal. Women have a right to be women and if that includes being different from men, women have a right to be different from men and—importantly—also vice versa. After all, innovation stems from diversity (e.g., Hewlett et al., 2013). Furthermore, women have a right to understand these differences as well as the hormonal changes that not only their body, but also their brain, goes through during their lifetime. So it's important that neuroscience starts paying more attention!

The aim of this Research Topic is to point out directions and perspectives on how to resolve inconsistencies in sex difference research. The idea is to move from scattered findings on sex differences in the brain to a neuroscience of sex differences that will help researchers to understand and predict sex differences in their findings and integrate them into their theories.

From the beginning of sex difference research, it has been hypothesized that sex differences in behavior are at least in part driven by hormonal influences on the brain either during development (organizational) or later in life (activation) (e.g., Kelly et al., 1999). Of course, not all sex differences can be attributable to sex hormones, but genetic, epigenetic, and chromosomal effects also play an important role, as pointed out by Ivanka Savic' contribution to this topic (Savic, 2014). However, sex hormone influences have been hypothesized to explain that variation in performance is higher in women than in men (e.g., Hausmann and Günstürkün, 1999). Therefore, sex hormones are of special interest to this topic as one important factor that might explain inconsistencies between sex difference studies.

Accordingly, the idea for this Research Topic was born during a study on sex differences in number processing. In a number bisection task, we found for two behavioral effect that sex differences in brain activation patterns were present during one cycle phase (follicular or luteal), but

Diamond,2008-02-28 Is love blind when it comes to gender For women it just might be This unsettling and original book offers a radical new understanding of the context dependent nature of female sexuality Lisa M Diamond argues that for some women love and desire are not rigidly heterosexual or homosexual but fluid changing as women move through the stages of life various social groups and most important different love relationships This perspective clashes with traditional views of sexual orientation as a stable and fixed trait But that view is based on research conducted almost entirely on men Diamond is the first to study a large group of women over time She has tracked one hundred women for more than ten years as they have emerged from adolescence into adulthood She summarizes their experiences and reviews research ranging from the psychology of love to the biology of sex differences Sexual Fluidity offers moving first person accounts of women falling in and out of love with men or women at different times in their lives For some gender becomes irrelevant I fall in love with the person not the gender say some respondents Sexual Fluidity offers a new understanding of women s sexuality and of the central importance of love Sexuality & Ageing Walter Bouman,Peggy Kleinplatz,2017-10-02 Across the globe both in developed and developing countries the population is rapidly ageing In the fields of sexual and relationship therapy and sexual health ageing has not been an issue of priority Too often ageing is thought of as a process that relates to problems deficits and taboos and less to pleasure change growth and diversity It is treated as a separate life stage and not a process throughout the lifecycle Sexuality and sexual health are important parts of the lives of older people as they have a significant impact on quality of life psychological well being and physical health as well as social and family life This book brings together contributions from those currently writing on and researching ageing as it relates in a therapeutic context to gender identity to sex and sexuality and to intimate relationships This book was originally published as a special issue of Sexual and Relationship Therapy The Oxford Handbook of Sex Offences and Sex Offenders Teela Sanders,2017 The Oxford Handbook on Sex Offenses and Sex Offenders provides comprehensive even handed analysis of the myriad of topics related to sex offenses including pornography sex trafficking criminal justice responses and the role of social media in sex crimes Extending beyond the existing scholarly research on the topic this volume teases out the key debates controversies and challenges involved in addressing sex crimes Sex, Sexuality and Therapeutic Practice Catherine Butler,Amanda O'Donovan,Elizabeth Shaw,2009-10-26 This evidence based manual examines issues of sexuality in a positive and affirming light and considers how sexuality related issues can be introduced into therapy and training It will support the practicing therapist as well as those in training
