Abstract:

This study focuses on Kautilya's Arthashastra's Mandal Theory and its applicability in the contemporary world. In Arthashastra, mandalas are represented by concentric circles that represent varying levels of influence and power. The theory emphasises the significance of diplomacy, war, and territorial expansion in the consolidation of power. Both the Mandal Theory and contemporary geopolitical realism acknowledge the pre-eminence of power and the pursuit of national interests in international relations.

The theories highlight the significance of power, security, alliances, and territorial expansion in shaping the behaviour of states. The comparative analysis of Kautilya's Arthashastra and contemporary geopolitical realism reveals their enduring significance for comprehending international relations.

Introduction:

The Mandala Theory of Kautilya's Arthashastra and the principles of modern geopolitical realism offer compelling insights into the complexities of international relations and statecraft, despite being separated by millennia. Ancient Indian political strategist and advisor to Chandragupta Maurya, founder of the Mauryan Empire. In his seminal work, the Arthashastra, he expounded the "Mandala Theory" as the foundation of his statecraft and foreign policy recommendations.

In contrast, modern geopolitical realism, which has its roots in the works of scholars such as Hans Morgenthau and Kenneth Waltz, provides a contemporary framework for comprehending state behaviour in the global arena. Despite being separated by time, cultural context, and terminology, the Mandala Theory and modern geopolitical realism share striking similarities in their fundamental principles. Among them are the emphasis on state-centric politics, the pursuit of national interests, the role of power in international relations, and the strategic management of neighbouring states.

This critical study examines the Mandala Theory of Kautilya's Arthashastra and its relationship to contemporary geopolitical realism. It seeks to untangle the historical and theoretical ties between these two paradigms, revealing how ancient wisdom continues to resonate in the contemporary global landscape.

Literature Review:

According to tradition, Chanakya, a Brahmin, served as Chandragupta's (321–296 B.C.) prime minister. The Mauryan Empire was founded by Chandragupta (G Modelski, 1964). After Alexander the Great's death, Chandragupta won his first campaigns against some of the satraps the Macedonian conqueror had established west of the Indus.
