

Comparative Political Theory Essay Example

Introduction

Politics has been a common feature throughout the history of human beings. There has been the tendency to seek support from other people so as to be recognized as the leader or attain the powers that control how people act in all units of the society starting from the family up to holding international positions of leadership. It is not universally agreed on what is the best system of leadership whether for religious leadership, political or for social organizations. There are benefits for leadership which have contributed so much to the deception of the uneducated and the weaker people in the different societies. Most of the political leaders have turned to unethical ways of attaining their positions due to the benefits offered to them such as financial gains and crooked means of attaining and protecting the ill-gotten wealth. However, this has been changing over time as humanity moves towards civilization. Comparing the political systems of different countries and also in relation to the changing time and level of civilization is proving helpful towards attaining a considerable level of normalcy in politics.

Comparative theory is used to compare the political systems of different countries and also for comparison to the political systems as they were before and the way they are now. There exists a major difference in the political systems of the countries located on the various parts of the world. Although there is not one perfect political system, there are those that have been viewed as relatively better and so many other countries or organizations are working towards getting their systems to that level of the pacesetters. Most of these relatively good systems are in Europe and North America where the countries have had their political systems revised over time with methods of getting rid of the undesirable characteristics being drafted into their constitutions so as avoid faults in the systems (Parel & Kelth, 2003).

The countries in the Europe and North America are viewed as the Joneses as they are referred to by the third world countries which are mostly from Africa. They have admirable political systems as regarded by the third world countries and they also have relatively stable economic and social structures. However, there is no such a scenario as having a perfect political or socio-economic structure. Most of the developing countries have just been trapped into thinking that everything from the developpe
