Inequalities of Gender: Education, work, and politics

Benjamin D. Hennig maps gender inequality around the world and finds that the political sphere is often the most resistant to change.

Unequal treatment based on gender is deeply embedded in many countries. Gender studies emerged as an important part of academic research in the 1980s. The issue of gender inequality also emerged on the global political agenda, albeit slowly. Gender-related measures became part of the Human Development Index (HDI) by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

In 2010, gender was eventually fully integrated in the Human Development Report (HDR) as the Gender Inequality Index (GII). Unlike the HDI, the GI is particularly aimed at exposing differences in achievements between women and men, and at measuring the human development costs of gender inequality. The higher the value of the index is, the greater are the disparities between females and males, and the greater the loss to human emancipation in general.

The GI captures disadvantages facing women and girls, and discrimination in health, education, political representation and the labour market. The GI measures reproductive health (maternal mortality, and adolescent birth rates), empowerment (proportion of parliamentary seats occupied by females and proportion of adult females and males aged 25 and older with at least some secondary education) and economic status (women's labour force participation).

A higher value of the UN Gender inequality index (GII) indicates greater gender inequality. While gender inequality remains a problem in the relatively more equal societies, it is a major barrier to human development in many developing states.

The worst performing nations are those in the two highest quintiles of the data (index values of 0.45 and above). As shown in the gender equality map, the highest inequalities are found in countries where a substantial part of the global population lives, most notably the African continent and South- and Southeast Asia. The EU average is 0.13, world average 0.45 and Arab States average 0.55.

Men may well suffer as well as women in countries that tolerate greater levels of gender inequality, with their partners more likely to die in childbirth, the male-dominated politics of the country being more aggressive, and men often expected to take on more traditional male roles rather than having greater flexibility. Gender inequality is also geographically more complex than such an index may suggest.

Two examples taken from the GI demonstrate these varying spatial patterns, providing an insight into how gender inequality affects different aspects of society. The two smaller maps show the gender gaps in education and in the labour market as expressed through the ratio of females to males participating in both areas. The education map shows the ratio for the population aged 25 and above with at least some secondary education. South American countries, on average, have high levels of gender inequality but they also, as this map shows, have a high share of women participating in secondary education.

The labour market map shows the ratio for the population aged 15 and above participating in the labour force. Here large parts of the Arab world stand out with a female to male ratio of below 0.5, meaning that more than two men for every woman are participating in the labour market (up to 5.9:1 in Yemen). At the same time, these are not the most unequal countries according to the index.

These two examples show the complexity of gender inequality and that achieving change requires more than just addressing single issues. Global efforts to achieve change include the inclusion of gender equality in the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) where goal five aims to 'achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls' by 2030.

Accomplishing the goal of gender equality requires leadership and political action. Yet politics is one of the fields where gender inequality is a major problem. Political participation of women remains overall low, and across the world the number of women in leadership positions is low.

In January 2019, just 11 women were serving as head of state and ten as head of government according to United Nations statistics. An earlier UN study showed that in 2017 only 18.3 per cent of government ministers were women, often with very particular portfolios such as environment, natural resources, and energy, followed by social sectors, such as social affairs, education and the family.

The map of the gender gap in politics shows the 2018 GI data for political

Gender, Definitional Politics and 'Live' Knowledge Production Emily F. Henderson, 2019-06-17 Waking up to the reactivity of concepts to their myriad possibilities for signification to the range and strength of affective responses they provoke can happen at any time in any place Conceptual contestations shake up the comfortably consolidated foundations of sociological knowledge production but they also have consequences for the ways in which lives are understood researched and legislated for This book is dedicated to exploring the definitional politics which surround the concept of gender in live knowledge production While conferences remain an under researched phenomenon this volume places conference knowledge production under the spotlight conferences in particular national women's studies association conferences in the UK the US and India are explored as sites where definitional politics play out The cumulative theorisation of live conceptual knowledge production that is developed throughout the book draws on established constructs such as performativity citationality intersectionality materiality and events but works with them in combination in a new unique way The book as a whole calls for more attention to be paid to conceptual knowledge production so as to make more space for potentially transformative conceptual change

Gender, Race, and the Politics of Role Modelling Wayne Martino, Goli Rezai-Rashti, 2012-03-12 This book provides an illuminating account of teachers own reflections on their experiences of teaching in urban schools It was conceived as a direct response to policy related and media generated concerns about male teacher shortage and offers a critique of the call for more male role models in elementary schools to address important issues regarding gender race and the politics of representation By including the perspectives of minority teachers and students and by drawing on feminist queer and anti racist frameworks this book rejects the familiar tendency to resort to role modelling as a basis for explaining or addressing boys disaffection with schooling Indeed the authors argue on the basis of their research in urban schools in Canada and Australia that educational policy concerned with male teacher shortage and the plight of disadvantaged minority boys would benefit from engaging with analytic perspectives and empirical literature that takes readers beyond hegemonic discourses of role modelling A compelling case is presented for the need to disarticulate discourses about role modelling from a politics of representation that is committed to addressing the reality of the impact of racial and structural inequalities on both minority teachers and students participation in the education system The book also provides insight into the persistence of gender inequality as it relates to the status of elementary school teaching as women s work      Gender and the Politics of Schooling Madeleine Arnot, 2018-11-27 Originally published in 1987 The perspectives research methods and strategies adopted by researchers and teachers to investigate gender and education have been diverse and contradictory This book provides an overview of developments and analyses the range of policy responses to the issues of sex inequality as well Divided into six parts the first indicates the range of feminist theories conceptualizing gender and provides context for the following parts on equality of opportunity gender power and schools and studies on class race and gender The last parts explore how education and training provision in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries were shaped by assumptions about masculinity and femininity and examine patterns of policy making on equal opportunities at teacher local and national levels      The SAGE Handbook of Gender and Education Christine Skelton, Becky Francis, Lisa Smulyan, 2006-10-23 The Handbook of Gender and Education brings together leading scholars on gender and education to provide an up to date and broad ranging guide to the field It is a comprehensive overview of different theoretical positions on equity issues in schools The contributions cover all sectors of education from early years to higher education curriculum subjects methodological and theoretical perspectives and gender identities in education Each chapter reviews synthesises and provides a critical interrogation of key contemporary themes in education This approach ensures that the book will be an indispensable source of reference for a wide range of readers students academics and practitioners The first section of the Handbook Gender Theory and Methodology outlines the various feminist perspectives on researching and exploring gender and education The section critiques the notion of gender as a category in educational research and considers recent trends evident especially in the gender and underachievement debates to locate gender difference solely within biology This section provides the broad background upon which the issues and debates in the other sections can be situated Section two Gender and Education considers the differing ways in which gender has been shown to impact upon the opportunities and experiences of pupils students teachers and other adults in the different sectors of education It also includes a chapter on single sex schooling Section three Gender and School Subjects comprises chapters that cover gender issues within the teaching and learning of particular school subjects for example maths literacy and science It also includes topics such as sex education and assessment The chapters in section four Gender identity and educational sites address up to date issues which have a long history in terms of explorations into gender and educational opportunities More recent inclusions in the debates such as disability sexuality and masculinities are discussed alongside the more traditional concerns of race social class and femininities The final section Working in Schools and Colleges illuminates the working lives of teachers and academics The chapters cover such topics as school culture career progression and development and the gendered identities of professionals within educational institutions The contributors to this book have been selected by the

be resisted By transnationalising our inquiries into the epistemic affective and political nature of the anti gender phenomenon this volume troubles the origin stories we tell about where anti genderpolitics come from and helps to better locate the various sources actors and networks behind these attacks contesting the notion that anti gender politics derive solely from right wing nationalist or conservative religious actors to show how they also derive from more centrist liberal leftist and even presumably feminist positions The book thus invites us to sharpen and rethink the conceptual vocabularies and strategies we use to understand and resist anti gender attacks opening up space for envisioning new political imaginaries and transnational feminist solidarities Chapter 1 is available open access under a Creative Commons Attribution 4 0 International License via link springer.com
