

ings. This is the richest story of Providence.

The memory of the Garden of Eden had not yet perished from among men. All nations have had their traditions of a Golden Age, some lost Paradise.

Verse 11. The evil spirit is proud to serve its own ends. Let begin to show its own, and without delay proceed to take possession of his rich treasure.

How vile is the sin of contentment, which so dulls the conscience as to permit a man to enjoy what he has gained by an improper action!

The words "all the plain" seem to hint at the grasping disposition of Lot. Nothing less than this will satisfy him. This hint of greed, the insatiable desire to add "house to house and bay to bay," all there is no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth," has given birth to deeds of treachery and covetousness.

It was hoped that Abram and Lot should part, for events were pointing to a possible separation in heart. It is well to secure peace, even at some pain and inconvenience to ourselves.

As nature, affection, religion, affection, all conspired to unite them, I doubt the prospect of separation was a severe trial to the feelings of Alving, but it was a friendly parting, and whatever blow was dealt by it to his happiness, it was speedily and abundantly compensated by renewed manifestations of love from that Almighty Friend "who stretcheth closer than a brother" (1st Cor. 13).

Thus, for awhile, is the path of faith more lonely. The true believer is more than ever cast on God. The Leta "choose" according to the sight of their eyes, and so, by degrees, get from communion with the gaily in communion with the gloomy. Unlike weak, unwarmed or later, more vigorous

[illegible]

Verse 11. The children of faith in control with their precious power. Their precious temporal treasure, not distract their hope and confidence in God.

It is possible, after all, that the principle itself lay in preferring to live in the place he did. If he could have lived on the plain, and measured a sufficient distance from that inhospitable place, there might have been another matter; but perhaps he did not like to live alone, and therefore "laid in the vicinity of the plain and pushed his tent towards Adah." The love of society, like all other natural principles, may prove a blessing in a case, and we may see by this example the danger of leaving religious maxims for so man feels it not good to be alone, if he forgoe those, he will be a man not impelled by his inclination to take up with others of a contrary description.—Ed. Rev.

The who sets his face towards the tents of sin will soon become the victim of the dangerous fascination of the enchanted ground, and unless the power of God prevails over his weakness, he draws onwards, step by step, to his destruction.

How dangerous it is to commit ourselves to a course of sin, even when the motions of it are scarcely perceptible. This is like venturing on the outer edge of the whirlpool, and so on.

[illegible]

TABLE 18. The greatest dependency is also found amongst the inhabitants of the most fertile lands. Such is the experience of human nature that the gifts of God are most lavishly bestowed upon the poor.

It is not of the moral dangers of property that men become so troubled with the present world that they think they have no need of God.

1. If it nourishes our affections and pains. 2. If it deepens of the breadth of religious conviction.
3. If it expands us to the contagion of and example. 4. If the spirit of the world is increased upon us that we love God and our duty.

As a bar of iron has its breaking strain, so the every man there is a certain strength of temptation which his moral nature is not able to withstand. It is disastrous for us willingly to expose ourselves to the power of temptation with its greatest force.

The grace of God will support us was in the ordinary temptations of life, but to rush into the midst of the most heated atmosphere of war in doing so.

“Men are to be estimated by the light of God. Crime has reference to the evil inflicted upon society, but sin has reference to man's moral accountability to God.

The higher knowledge of good society was wanting in the chambers of Lot. It was probable he was a single man, when he parted from Abram; and, therefore, that he married a woman of Judah. He has in that case fallen into the snare of marrying in, at all events, mingling with the ungodly. This was the damning sin of the antediluvian (Gen. vi. 1-5). Sinners before the Lord accordingly. Their country was as the garden of the Lord. But the beauty of the landscape, and the superabundance of the luxuriant life afforded, did not abate the sinful disposition of the inhabitants. Their moral corruption only broke forth into greater violence of lust, and more daring debauches of license. The sinful accordingly, and before the Lord, Lot has fallen into the very snare of vice and blasphemy (Nabuch).

(Nathaniel.) It is an awful character which is born given of Lot's new neighbors.
All men are sinners; but they were
"wicked, and sinners before the Lord exceedingly." When Abram went to a new place it was usual for him to sacrifice as altar to the Lord; but there is no mention of anything like this when Lot settled in or near to Sodom
(cf. Psalm).
