

Great Lakes Migrations

As the Great Lakes expand because of a melt-off in the Arctic, people begin to migrate. Survival camps are established primarily in Iowa, Illinois, Ohio, and Kentucky.

Mississippi Basin Migrations

As the Great Lakes expand, the Mississippi River system recedes several miles, forcing migrations from the delta. Survival camps are established in Texas, Oklahoma and Mississippi.

New Land

As the North American Plate shifts its position, the Atlantic Ocean floor rises to create two significant islands and several smaller ones. One of these islands, or at least one of these islands, is expected to be discovered.

Central America and the Caribbean

Central America will be inundated and reduced to a series of islands. Elevations above 500 feet will be considered safe. The Panama Canal will become impossible.

Canada

The islands of Newfoundland, Queen Charlotte, and others, will be inundated. Most of British Columbia's coastline will be pushed in as much as 200 miles. The entire length of the Rocky Mountains and west should be considered at risk, not necessarily from ocean, but from into-sound strong enough to cause land slumping and landslides. Flooding in the Northwest Territory, Hudson Bay area and north, will result in the formation of a series of islands in the higher elevations. Islands will become the central focus of Canada during the early 21st century. Migrations will arrive from the Arctic and the north.

Central Canada in Eastern Canada will be inundated anywhere from 50 to 100 miles. Rivers around the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence River and the Gulf of St. Lawrence should be considered unsafe. Because of flooding from the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes, people in Quebec will move northeast and join with those from Ottawa to form a new city.

The East Coast

Weather patterns cause great damage along the Eastern Seaboard, threatening each year in magnitude and damage done. Shortly after the beginning of the 21st century, the East Coast of the United States begins its changes. Most of Manhattan is to be inundated and broken up from quakes, including Wall Street. Eventually, a new financial system will be created in Florida.

The entire West Coast, from Maine to the Florida Keys, becomes inundated numerous times because of tsunami originating in Europe and the North Pacific, and later from a melt-off in the Arctic because of the ice age's pole shifts. The West Coast is pushed westward, anywhere from a few miles to 200 miles, away from land which rises in elevation in two places. One is from Chesapeake Bay, Virginia south to Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, and the other is on land in Florida from Jacksonville to Cape Canaveral.

East Coast Migrations

As changes accelerate, people on the East Coast of the United States begin to migrate inland. As with the West Coast, the migrants are most at risk. As water levels rise, the islands of the melting and melting of land masses and the melting of the poles, the migrations expand to millions. Survival camps are established predominantly in southern Vermont, east-central New York, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, and Maine. Migrations move inland North Carolina, and north-central Florida.

Mexico
Coastal areas of Mexico will be inundated for miles. The California Bight will become a series of islands. Most of the Yucatan Peninsula will be lost to the sea. Volcanic and seismic activity will continue into the twenty-first century.
