Insulin resistance in aging is related to abdominal obesity.

By: WM Kohrt, JP Kirwan, MA Staten, RE Bourey, DS King, JO Holloszy

Factors associated with the decline in glucose tolerance seen with aging are not well understood. In this study, the independent effects of age and regional and total obesity on insulin resistance were evaluated using a hyperinsulinemic euglycemic clamp in 17 younger (21 to 33 years old) and 67 older (60 to 72 years old) men and women. Body composition and fat distribution were measured by hydrodensitometry and anthropometry. Waist circumference alone accounted for >40% of the variance in the glucose disappearance rate among the younger and older subjects. Age explained only 10% to 20% of the total variance. These findings suggest that abdominal obesity rather than age is the more important determinant of insulin resistance. —AR

Diabetes 1993;42:288-95

Early exposure to cow's milk and solid foods in infancy, genetic predisposition, and risk of IDDM.

By: JN Kostraba, KJ Cruickshanks, J Lawler-Heavner

In a case-control design, an infant diet history was collected from 164 subjects with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus (IDDM) and 145 nondiabetic control subjects. The association between early exposure (<3 months of age) to cow's milk and solid foods with IDDM risk was evaluated. Subjects with diabetes were found to have been younger when first exposed to cow's milk and to solid foods compared with control subjects, after controlling for ethnicity, birth order, and family income. To account for genetic susceptibility to IDDM, diabetic and control subjects were divided into high- and low-risk groups according to an HLA-DQB1 molecular marker. In low-risk individuals, early exposure to cow's milk and solid foods was not associated with an increased IDDM risk. However, early exposure to cow's milk was associated with a significantly increased risk in high-risk individuals compared with unexposed low-risk individuals. Similar findings were observed with solid foods. —AR

New England Journal of Medicine 1993;328:10-14

Association between polymorphism of the glycogen synthase gene and non-insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus.

By: LC Groop, M Kankari, C Schalin-Jääntti, et al

Concordance of non-insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus (NIDDM) in identical twins is strong evidence of a genetic component of this disease. The glycogen synthase gene, on chromosome 19, was studied because glycogen storage in muscle often is impaired in people with NIDDM and their non-diabetic relatives. The A₂ allele of this gene identifies a group of people with a strong family history of NIDDM and in whom hypertension and insulin resistance are prevalent. —JC

Effects of dietary fiber and carbohydrate on glucose and lipoprotein metabolism in diabetic patients.

By: G Riccardi, A Rivellese

Dietary recommendations for the treatment of patients with diabetes issued by national and international diabetes associations consistently stress the need to increase carbohydrate intake. However, these recommendations have been questioned on the basis of growing evidence that, in both insulin-dependent and non-insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus, a high-carbohydrate diet does not offer any advantage in terms of blood glucose levels and plasma lipid concentrations compared with a high-fat (mainly unsaturated) diet. In fact, a high-carbohydrate diet has been associated with increases in plasma insulin and triglyceride levels, and can cause deterioration in postprandial blood glucose control. This controversy can be settled by considering dietary fiber. Studies have shown that many of the adverse effects of carbohydrate-rich diets can be overcome by increasing consumption of both fiber and carbohydrate. There are indications that in humans, only water-soluble fiber affects plasma glucose and lipoprotein metabolism. Therefore, consumption of legumes, vegetables, and fruits that are high in soluble fiber should be encouraged. A balanced increase in consumption of fiber-rich foods and unsaturated fat is the best way to replace foods rich in saturated fat and cholesterol for patients with diabetes. —CP

Journal of the American Dietetic Association 1993;93:34-39

Guidelines vs practice in the delivery of diabetes nutrition care.

By: MS Arnold, et al

The Michigan Diabetes Research and Training Center collected data from 440 randomly selected adults with diabetes who received care from community physicians in 1990. Thirty-four percent had never consulted with a dietitian. Patients taking insulin were judged to have a greater need for diet instruction. The most common reason for not seeing a dietitian was lack of referral by the physician. Dietitians need to promote their role and the importance of nutrition information in diabetes care to both physicians and patients. —JC
