

The background image is a painting of two women in late 19th-century attire. The woman on the left is seen from the back, wearing a teal dress with a white collar and a straw boater hat. The woman on the right is in profile, wearing a light-colored dress with a brown belt and a matching hat. They are standing on a cobblestone path in front of a wooden building. Several posters are pinned to the building's exterior, including one with a portrait of a man and another with the text 'THE NEW YORK'.

Carlyle Oliver Cromwell, 1857 Constructing the Outbreak Katherine A. Foss, 2020-09-25 When an epidemic strikes media outlets are central to how an outbreak is framed and understood While reporters construct stories intended to inform the public and convey essential information from doctors and politicians news narratives also serve as historical records capturing sentiments responses and fears throughout the course of the epidemic Constructing the Outbreak demonstrates how news reporting on epidemics communicates more than just information about pathogens rather prejudices political agendas religious beliefs and theories of disease also shape the message Analyzing seven epidemics spanning more than two hundred years from Boston's smallpox epidemic and Philadelphia's yellow fever epidemic in the eighteenth century to outbreaks of diphtheria influenza and typhoid in the early twentieth century Katherine A Foss discusses how shifts in journalism and medicine influenced the coverage preservation and fictionalization of different disease outbreaks Each case study highlights facets of this interplay delving into topics such as colonization tourism war and politics Through this investigation into what has been preserved and forgotten in the collective memory of disease Foss sheds light on current health care debates like vaccine hesitancy
