When Mayors Use School Choice as a Reform Strategy Kenneth K. Wong, Francis X. Shen, Lauren M. Pachucki, 2006 All political scientists who study education policy start their analysis with a similar premise educational reform does not take place in political vacuum Studies of the politics of school choice have focused primarily on state level political dynamics This line of research makes sense since the charter school market is initially created and subsequently altered by the state legislature In this paper however the authors break from this trend and focus their attention on local government and the politics of school choice Specifically they examine the relationship between school choice and big city mayors Their preliminary analysis finds that mayoral positions on school choice is influenced not only the existing legislation governing school choice in their city but also by their city's size and racial composition Contains 5 tables and 65 footnotes

Contrasting Dynamics in Education Politics of Extremes, 2015-01-01 This book aims to enhance understanding of school choice as a supra national travelling policy explored in two strikingly different societies Latin American Chile and North European Finland Chile was among the first countries to implement school choice as a policy which it did comprehensively in the early 1980s through the creation of a market environment Finland introduced parental choice of a school on a very moderate scale and without the market elements in the mid 1990s Predominant aspects of Chilean basic schooling include provision by for profit and non profit private and municipal organisations voucher system parental co payment and ranking lists Finland persists in keeping education under public authority governance and free of charge and in prohibiting profit making and rankings The wide range of sociologists of education contributing to this book offer novel analyses and perspectives on the operation of school choice in Chile the trailblazer and Finland the European PISA leader Agn s van Zanten's description of how school choice operates as a major dimension of social reproduction sets the scene After that Chilean and Finnish authors explore how the policy is displayed and used explicitly for very different societal purposes although implicitly following similar patterns in the two countries with their histories politics and cultures Empirically the focus is on how families view and act on school choice The research material includes large surveys interviews and ethnographic data gathered in urban Chile and Finland Capitalising on the concept of dynamics the book concludes with some insights into how this globally travelling education policy has materialised in two apparently dissimilar societies and their localities

Haire, 2010 This qualitative study examines the education policies political dynamics and key players in Wisconsin wi and North Carolina nc to develop a theory to explain how a targeted parental school choice voucher policy was legislated in wi but not in nc The study seeks to offer a theoretical policy framework that explains the absence of a targeted parental school choice voucher policy in nc Using Grounded Theory methods this study examines the policies politics and players of wi in the years leading up to 1990 when the Milwaukee Parental Choice Program was legislated The debate that took place is described through the lens of the six major controversial concepts found in the literature The study reveals how the contentiously debated issues were overcome by the application of a policy framework that supported success By contrast the study explores the policymaking dynamics the politics and the players of nc to discover why no targeted parental school choice voucher debate has taken place and what level of controversy exists if at all This study uses the generative and emergent processes of Grounded Theory through archival research historical analysis and personal interviews with a total of five identified and nine anonymous participants including high level public officials to systematically generate a theory about the absence of a targeted voucher policy in nc The data analysis suggests that the social construction policy framework as applied to both the dependent student population in Milwaukee and to the advantaged k 12 public school advocates in nc provides a theoretical proposition to explain the absence of a targeted voucher policy in nc Implications from the study s conclusions are that to attain successful school choice legislation advocates for parental school choice must recognize and work within the social construction policy framework Their efforts should be directed at diminishing the advantaged status of k 12 public education advocates and constructing a targeted group of disadvantaged dependent and deserving students to be assigned the benefits of parental school choice vouchers With a targeted population in place either the disadvantaged and poor mostly minority students of NC s inner cities and rural areas or the students with disabilities population the strength of an advocacy coalition and striking at the window of opportunity the parental school choice advocates will improve the chances for success The dissertation citations contained here are published with the permission of ProQuest llc Further reproduction is prohibited without permission Copies of dissertations may be obtained by Telephone 800 1 800 521 0600 Web page <http://www.proquest.com/en-US/products/dissertations/individuals.shtml>
