

ORAL HEALTH & PREGNANCY

How they are Related

PREGNANCY GINGIVITIS

Did you know that you can develop a unique form of gingivitis while pregnant? Changing hormone levels can make your gums swell, bleed more easily, and feel irritated. Floss and rinse regularly.

CRAVINGS

Pregnancy can make you crave foods like pickles and ice cream that are terrible for your teeth, ranging from the highly acidic to the sugary. It's important to brush and floss after each meal to prevent plaque buildup and enamel damage.

PREGNANCY "TUMORS"

During the second trimester of pregnancy, you may develop small, benign masses between the teeth as a result of hormonal shifts. While they may fade after giving birth, you can visit a dentist to inspect and remove them.

MORNING SICKNESS

Morning nausea, heartburn and reflux during pregnancy can be difficult enough to endure. However, it's important to remember the permanent effects that regurgitated acids can have on your teeth. Acids deteriorate enamel, increasing risk of decay.
