1. Introduction

Carbohydrates, proteins, fats and oils are utilized as food by man and animals. Other chemical compounds in plants apart from those listed above are phytochemical. Such compounds usually exert peculiar, unique and specific active physiological effects responsible for their therapeutic and pharmacological functions. Activities of such naturally occurring compounds are generally responsible for changes, which are utilized to satisfy man's desires. Phytochemical studies afford revelation and understanding of phytoconstituents, as much as possible conserving their bioactivities, and are on how to standardize them; compared with the crude herbal methods that are not easily standardized. These complex substances of diverse nature occur mostly in plant based foods; they are in very small amounts in grams or mg or $\mu\text{g/Kg}$ of samples. They do not add to body calorie and are numerous in types. These phytochemical are applied mostly for preventive and healing purposes. About 25% of prescribed drugs are obtained from phytochemical in higher plants. Plants are safe means of obtaining drugs. About 250,000 higher plants have promising phytochemical, half of which are located in tropical forests; 60% of these have their biological activities established, while about 15% of them have their phyto-compounds isolated and reported [Hamburger and Hostettman, 1991].

Studies and researches into medicinal constituents of plants, involve qualitative and quantitative analyses. There is rationale behind each experimental work involving definite steps and processes; having in mind properties of compounds analyzed in conjunction with procedures utilized. Also our desired active molecule to be isolated and studied as interested lead compound, many times is in very complex mixtures of many unwanted and undesired materials [known as contaminants], which have close properties to our desired bioactive molecules.

2. General and specific techniques, procedures and methods in phytochemical analyses, with highlight on recent developments in phytochemistry

Most of the techniques and procedures in phytochemical analyses are cumbersome and taxing, to have detailed understanding of phytoconstituents- [their activities, structures, how to improve on them and standardize them]. If they are carefully followed one achieve
