Norgate John Richard Green,1902 Library of Congress Catalog Library of Congress,1970 A cumulative list of works represented by Library of Congress printed cards The World's Cyclopaedia of History ,1883 Eminent English Liberals in and out of Parliament John Morrison Davidson,2020-09-28 William Ewart Gladstone is the fourth son of Sir John Gladstone of Fasque Kincardineshire first baronet He was born on the 29th of December 1809 at Liverpool where his father who had originally come from Leith was then famous as a successful merchant and as an influential friend and partisan of Canning The name was originally spelt Gladstones or Gledstones gled being Lowland Scottish for a hawk and stanes meaning rocks It is still not uncommon in many parts of rural Scotland to call a man by the place of his abode at the expense of his proper patronymic In earlier times such local appellations often adhered permanently to individuals and it is to this process that the Gladstone family is indebted for its name The Premier's mother was the daughter of Mr Andrew Robertson Provost of Dingwall whose descent the credulous Burke traces from Robert Bruce the patriot King of Scotland Be this as it may Mr Gladstone is of pure Scottish blood a fact of which he has oftener than once expressed himself proud Indeed the perfervidum ingenium Scotorum is his in a remarkable degree and it has its influence on public opinion across the border notwithstanding his English training and his antipathetic High Churchism However England may abase herself before the gorgeous Lord Benjingo Scotland will never turn her back on the undecorated Gladstone There lives not a Scotsman that is not inwardly proud of him for blood is after all thicker than water Evicted from one English constituency after another for his devotion to Liberal principles there is a sort of fitness of things not without a certain pathos in the gallant and successful effort which the country of his forefathers has made to seize a seat for him from between the teeth of the great feudal despot

of the North the bold Buccleuch From a very tender age young Gladstone exhibited a wonderful aptitude for learning and an almost superhuman industry which age instead of abating seemingly increases His daily autograph correspondence with high and low rich and poor conducted chiefly by the much derided post card would afford ample employment for about six Somerset House clerks working at their usual pace He possesses I should say without exception the most omnivorous and untiring brain in England possibly in the whole world No wonder that his course at Eton and at Oxford was marked by the highest distinction A student of Christ Church he graduated double first in his twenty second year a superlative master of the language and literature of Greece and Rome He availed himself of every advantage the university could bestow and unlike most other scholars who subsequently become politicians and men of the world he has never ceased to add to the immense store of his academic acquirements He has published Latin sacred verses not appreciably inferior in grace to those of Buchanan and Milton and as a Homeric student his Studies of Homer and the Homeric Age entitle him to no mean place among scholarly critics
