Schooling The Poor A Social Inquiry Into The American Educational Experience:

Schooling the Poor Stanley William Rothstein,1994-06-22 By combining history with sociology Rothstein presents a new way of looking at state supported schools He describes the pauper schools of the early 1800s and shows how they became the foundation for the common schools that followed Compulsory education sought to alleviate urban crime while assimilating the immigrants who flocked to our shores in each generation In the late 19th century the militaristic schools became more bureaucratic and set in their ways in spite of the new thinking in education represented by John Dewey Rothstein shows how Dewey was taught in college but that Thorndike was followed in the public schools The high school was an attempt to meet the changing needs of the Industrial Revolution After recapitulating the foundational history of American public schools Rothstein examines the psychological effects of martinet teaching methods on students self perception and performance A stunning new old perspective on American education American Educational History William Jeynes,2007-01-24 American Educational History School Society and the Common Good is an up to date contemporary examination of historical trends that have helped shape schools and education in the United States Author William H Jeynes places a strong emphasis on recent history most notably post World War II issues such as the role of technology the standards movement affirmative action bilingual education undocumented immigrants school choice and much more
