

The Principle of Locality

- The Principle of Locality:
 - Program access a relatively small portion of the address space at any instant of time.
- Two Different Types of Locality:
 - Temporal Locality (Locality in Time): If an item is referenced, it will tend to be referenced again soon (e.g., loops, reuse)
 - Spatial Locality (Locality in Space): If an item is referenced, items whose addresses are close by tend to be referenced soon (e.g., straightline code, array access)
- For last 20 years, HW has relied on locality for speed by using fast cache copies of memory parts to lower average memory access time (AMAT) for programs

Locality is a property of programs which is exploited in machine design.
