Curtain Christopher D. Hollings, 2015-12-12 This monograph provides a concise introduction to the tangled issues of communication between Russian and Western scientists during the Cold War It details the extent to which mid twentieth century researchers and practitioners were able to communicate with their counterparts on the opposite side of the Iron Curtain Drawing upon evidence from a range of disciplines a decade by decade account is first given of the varying levels of contact that existed via private correspondence and conference attendance Next the book examines the exchange of publications and the availability of one side's work in the libraries of the other It then goes on to compare general language abilities on opposite sides of the Iron Curtain with comments on efforts in the West to learn Russian and the systematic translation of Russian work In the end author Christopher Hollings argues that physical accessibility was generally good in both directions but that Western scientists were afflicted by greater linguistic difficulties than their Soviet counterparts whose major problems were bureaucratic in nature This volume will be of interest to historians of Cold War science particularly those who study communications and language issues In addition it will be an ideal starting point for anyone runs through the history of science from Newton's day to ours. Scientific journals are now central to academic research and careers. Their editorial and peer review processes act as a check on new claims and findings, and researchers build their careers on the list of journal articles they have published. The journal that reported Newton's optical experiments still exists. First published in 1665 and now fully digital, the Philosophical Transactions has carried papers by Charles Darwin, Dorothy Hodgkin, and Stephen Hawking. It is now one of eleven journals published by the Royal Society of London. Unrivalled insights from the Royal Society's comprehensive archives have enabled the authors to investigate more than 350 years of scientific journal publishing. The editorial management, business practices, and financial difficulties of the Philosophical Transactions and its sibling Proceedings reveal the meaning and purpose of journals in a changing scientific community. At a time when we are surrounded by calls to reform the academic publishing system, it has never been more urgent that we understand its history.

Reckoning with History K.J. Kesselring, Matthew Neufeld, 2024-09-03

Bringing together essays on uses of history as both a practical activity and an approach to thinking about the present, this collection explores ways in which people have reckoned with history in the past, both distant and near. Reckoning with History begins by examining uses of the past in early modern Britain, a period in which print, religious reformation, and political conflict transformed historical culture. Later essays offer insights into personal, popular, professional, and sometimes deeply political uses of the past in other times and places, helping to contextualize our own moments in historical writing and to link the early and post-modern periods. Throughout, contributors respond to the writings of Daniel Woolf, whose scholarship illuminates the history of the historical discipline and the social circulation of the past. Covering subjects such as early archival practices, memories of historic plagues, and the type of commemorations needed to revitalize liberal democracies, Reckoning with History contextualizes the uses of the past today.
