Michael Barton, Geoffrey A. Clark, David R. Yesner, Georges A. Pearson, 2016-03-04 When many scholars are asked about early human settlement in the Americas they might point to a handful of archaeological sites as evidence Yet the process was not a simple one and today there is no consistent argument favoring a particular scenario for the peopling of the New World This book approaches the human settlement of the Americas from a biogeographical perspective in order to provide a better understanding of the mechanisms and consequences of this unique event It considers many of the questions that continue to surround the peopling of the Western Hemisphere focusing not on sites dates and artifacts but rather on theories and models that attempt to explain how the colonization occurred Unlike other studies this book draws on a wide range of disciplines archaeology human genetics and osteology linguistics ethnology and ecology to present the big picture of this migration Its wide ranging content considers who the Pleistocene settlers were and where they came from their likely routes of migration and the ecological role of these pioneers and the consequences of colonization Comprehensive in both geographic and topical coverage the contributions include an explanation of how the first inhabitants could have spread across North America within several centuries the most comprehensive review of new mitochondrial DNA and Y chromosome data relating to the colonization and a critique of recent linguistic theories Although the authors lean toward a conservative rather than an extreme chronology this volume goes beyond the simplistic emphasis on dating that has dominated the debate so far to a concern with late Pleistocene forager adaptations and how foragers may have coped with a wide range of environmental and ecological factors It offers researchers in this exciting field the most complete summary of current knowledge and provides non specialists and general readers with new answers to the questions surrounding the origins of the first Americans unique place in the world of high academic interest with some of the earliest archaeological remains in the Americas. Researchers defined two strata and several Stratigraphic units in the site based on the sedimentological and pedological characteristics. The depositional zones contain archaeological remains that are interpreted as hunting events corresponding to two main different occasions in the human colonization of the region and a third human occupation during the Middle Holocene. Last one occurred then of the massive rockshelter roof collapse. The faunal remains led to a new approach to the palaeoenvironmental evolution of this enclosed basin. This volume describes the management of lithic raw materials and social networks from first human occupation of the Patagonian region to territorial consolidation of hunter gatherer societies.

Human Ecology of Beringia John F. Hoffecker, Scott A. Elias, 2007. Twenty five thousand years ago sea level fell more than 400 feet below its present position as a consequence of the growth of immense ice sheets in the Northern Hemisphere. A dry plain stretching 1 000 miles from the Arctic Ocean to the Aleutians became exposed between northeast Asia and Alaska and across that plain most likely walked the first people of the New World. This book describes what is known about these people and the now partly submerged land named Beringia which they settled during the final millennia of the Ice Age. Humans first occupied Beringia during a twilight period when rising sea levels had not yet caught up with warming climates. Although the land bridge between northeast Asia and Alaska was still present warmer and wetter climates were rapidly transforming the Beringian steppe into shrub tundra. This volume synthesizes current research some previously unpublished on the archaeological sites and rapidly changing climates and biota of the period suggesting that the absence of woody shrubs to help fire burn fuel may have been the barrier to earlier settlement and that from the outset the Beringians developed a postglacial economy similar to that of later northern interior peoples. The book opens with a review of current research and the major problems and debates regarding the environment and archaeology of Beringia. It then describes Beringian environments and the controversies surrounding their interpretation, traces the evolving adaptations of early humans to the cold environments of northern Eurasia which set the stage for the settlement of Beringia and provides a detailed account of the archaeological record in three chapters each of which is focused on a specific slice of time between 15 000 and 11 500 years ago. In conclusion the authors present an interpretive summary of the human ecology of Beringia and discuss its relationship to the wider problem of the peopling of the New
