Considering the direction of innovation in EU merger control

Juliane Mendelsohn on and Lukas Breide

Department of Law and Economics of Digitization, TU Ilmenau, Ilmenau, Germany

ABSTRACT

This paper considers the role that innovation plays in EU merger control analysis, and seeks to integrate perspectives highlighted by the philosophical literature on the so-called 'direction of innovation' in order to critically assess the impact of market concentration on the diversity of innovation and its ability to address larger normative questions and challenges, such as the transition to more sustainable economies. While normative goals other than competition are not an inherent part of merger control, this paper argues that in concentrated markets, ignoring such questions can play into the hands of the powerful merging entities, allowing them to further determine the direction of Innovation to best serve their interests and business models rather than public interests. This is illustrated by critically discussing the merger between Bayer and Monsanto as an example.

Introduction

As part of competition policy, merger control appraises concentrations and changes in market structures that often have a significant and long-lasting impact on markets and the development of industries and economies at large. While it is 'not the job of competition law to save the planet' (Khan 2022), both competition and innovation play a considerable role in deciding what the future markets and realities look like. This paper thus looks at the potential interaction of three things: the relationship between competition and market concentration; new perspectives on innovation; and the normative quest to address the sustainable development goals, in particular the counteraction of climate change. It postulates that the future structure of large industries and their innovation potential and diversity can play a large role in achieving sustainability goals. Critically analysing how market structures affect the innovative output and the so-called 'direction of innovation' could be a first step in this direction. This approach represents a diversion from traditional merger control, where market outputs such as innovation are often viewed as driven by market forces alone.

Directionality broadly describes the idea that innovation is not a blind or indeterminate process but that is can be the outcome of certain economic policies and market conditions.

Does EU Merger Control Discriminate against Small Market Companies? Mika Oinonen, 2010-07-20 Although the question posed by the title of this book has generated considerable debate the essential issue remains open and largely blurred While some believe that there is no so called small market problem others discern discrimination against small market companies i e companies with a strong position in their home markets but a modest position in the European and global markets and a consequent need for changes in competition law The author of this enormously helpful work here sets the stage for meaningful discussion by analysing the EC Merger Regulation's objectives economic foundations and application practice to present a reasoned view of the issues that can be considered relevant for such a discussion Considering their effect on the small market problem the author scrutinizes such factors as the following the Commission s methodology for delineating relevant markets in merger assessments unnecessary prohibition caused by overestimation of the market power of small market mergers erroneous approval of cases that should actually be prohibited impact of the so called Harvard and Chicago schools of competition theory and their key policy implications process related alternative views of competition and new synthesizing approaches relevant criteria for a proper analysis of market power concentration measures and market shares barriers to entry price and profitability analyses and product definition v geographic definition of markets In a final chapter the author presents some tentative conclusions normative in nature concerning the problem and the relevant issues relating to it As the first in depth analysis of the issues that are actually involved with its particular diagnosis of the assessment of market power in considering the relevant issues for the problem this study brings into salience the terms of the debate on the problem and thus takes a giant step forward towards defining what needs to be done Competition lawyers policymakers and academics in Europe and elsewhere will find the discussion of great value Merger Control in the EU and Turkey Fevzi Toksoy, Bahadir Balki, Hanna Stakheyeva, 2022-05-11 As a country on the way to integration with the European Union EU Turkey has been following EU principles in establishing and improving its merger control regime as well as overall competition law keeping pace with changes in relevant EU legislation and case law This book presents for the first time a description and analysis of the relationship between the EU and Turkish merger control law and practice The second edition of the book considers the legislative changes that occurred in 2020 2021 including the reform of the Turkish Competition Law which introduced the significant impediment to effective competition SIEC test into the Turkish concentration control The authors all three both practicing lawyers and academicians in Turkey focus on comparing substantive procedural and jurisdictional issues and draw parallels on their regulation in the two jurisdictions These matters include the following determining whether a transaction shall be regarded as a notifiable merger hence be subject to control financial thresholds used for allocating jurisdictions extraterritoriality of merger control relationship between the SIEC test and the dominance test determination of the relevant market techniques used for assessment of horizontal and non horizontal mergers notification requirements procedural duties of competition authorities in relation to
