

METHODOLOGY OF ECONOMICS

Methodology and method are sometimes used synonymously though they are not the same. Methodology may be a description of process, or a philosophically consistent collection of theories, concepts or ideas as they relate to a particular discipline or field of inquiry. Methodology is the study of methods and techniques. Method is a specific technique for data collection and analysis under those philosophical assumptions.

Economists derive economic principles that are useful in formulating policies designed to solve economic problems. The methods used by economists are:

1. Observing and Collecting Facts : Descriptive or empirical economics is concerned with gathering facts relevant to an economic problem.
2. Formulating Principles or theories or laws : Economists generalise about economic behaviour by formulating economic theory.
3. Prescribing Policies : Formulating policies for correcting or solving the economic problems.
