

RESEARCH METHODOLOGIES

Research methodologies can roughly be categorized into three groups: quantitative, qualitative, and mixed-methods.

QUALITATIVE RESEARCH

Qualitative research investigates human experiences and behavior through non-numerical data collection and analysis.

QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH

Quantitative research examines relationships between variables using numerical data and statistical techniques.

MIXED METHODS RESEARCH

Mixed methods research combines qualitative and quantitative approaches to provide a more holistic understanding of a research question.

Methodology In The Study Of International:

Methodology in the Study of International Relations Trygve Mathisen, 1959 Evaluating Methodology in International Studies Michael Brecher, Frank P. Harvey, 2002-08-14 Evaluating Methodology in International Studies offers a unique collection of original essays by world renowned political scientists. The essays address the state of the discipline in regard to the methodology of researching global politics focusing in particular on formal modeling, quantitative methods and qualitative approaches in International Studies. The authors reflect on the strengths and weaknesses of current methodology and suggest ways to advance theory and research in International Studies. This volume is essential reading for methods courses and will be of interest to scholars and students alike. See table of contents and excerpts. Frank P. Harvey is Professor of Political Science and Director of the Centre for Foreign Policy Studies at Dalhousie University. Michael Brecher is the R. B. Angus Professor of Political Science at McGill University and past president of the International Studies Association. Millennial Reflections on International Studies This volume is part of the Millennial Reflections on International Studies project in which forty five prominent scholars engage in self critical state of the art reflection on international studies to stimulate debates about successes and failures and to address the larger questions of progress in the discipline. Other paperbacks from this project: Realism and Institutionalism in International Studies, Conflict Security Foreign Policy and International Political Economy, Past Paths and Future Directions in International Studies, Critical Perspectives in International Studies. The full collection of essays is available in the handbook Millennial Reflections on International Studies.

Scientific Approaches to the Study of

International Relations Jan-Henrik Petermann, 2011-11-21 Essay from the year 2006 in the subject Politics General and Theories of International Politics London School of Economics Department of International Relations language English abstract Since the behaviourist turn of the 1960s questions concerning the appropriateness and desirability of a positivist research agenda have been at the forefront of meta methodological debate within the social sciences The evolving science wars between positivists and normativists have also presented enormous challenges to the epistemological identities and professional self images of scholars working in the academic field of International Relations IR Whereas positivists maintain that the overarching aim of science is the experimentally guided explanation of empirical phenomena under covering laws normativists and traditionalists hold that social scientists cannot and in fact should not emulate the causal models of the natural sciences According to this view it is virtually impossible to study the influences of distinct variables in complex social interactions and statistical aggregation merely obscures the fact that the true causes of events are rarely obvious in the social world Hence the purpose of political and social research ought to be a desire to understand processes from within rather than to explain them from outside Yet the traditionalist critique of social scientific positivism did not imply that positivists would be entirely oblivious to the importance of norms in international life IR does not only deal with descriptive but with political and ultimately prescriptive aspects of the social world Thus it might appear worthwhile to ask how scientific are so called scientific positivist approaches to the study of IR if their theoretical premises and empirical achievements are taken at face value and judged by their own standards of scientific neutrality and precision To answer this question I will first describe the spread of positivist thought in IR Secondly I will outline in how far two research programmes which have been heavily influenced by positivist method game theory and the democratic peace thesis have challenged traditionalist approaches and whether they can be regarded as truly scientific Drawing on these insights I will conclude that on closer inspection positivist research methods in IR do lack a perfectly scientific status although they have made important contributions to the academic field

Study On International Politics In Contemporary China Yuyan Zhang, 2020-07-14 China's guiding principle for foreign relations and its focus on states and regions has shifted a lot from the first 30 years of the founding of the People's Republic of China PRC in 1949 to 1978 and beyond after reform and opening up However PRC's diplomatic practice has been continuous whether it was participation in the Korean War breaking up with the former Soviet Union after a honeymoon period China's self defense war over Sino Indian border participation in the Vietnam War breakthrough in the Sino US relation or PRC's self defense war over the Sino Vietnamese border These historical events brought the need for theoretical study in International Politics IP The development of China's IP research was slow and filled with complications but it signified a breakthrough from scratch This book has filled gap by depicting a complete scroll of China's IP research in over 60 years since 1949 This book has followed two principles one is according to the classification of the IP discipline and the other is to recommend adaptations according to China's actual conditions Proceedings of the
