

PLATE II

Types of Nebulae (Normal and Barred Spirals)

The sequence of spirals is double, one branch containing normal spirals, the other containing barred spirals. Each branch is subdivided into two sections, designated by the subscripts a, b, and c, to the spiral type SB, and described as early, intermediate and late, normal or barred spirals. Positions in each branch are determined by the amount of material in the arms relative to that in the nuclear region, by the spacing of the arms and by the degree of resolution. The early spiral (I, or SB_a) appears to be closely related to the irregular (II) spiral. The transition from SB_a to SB_b is smooth and continuous but the type II's transition from SB_a to SB_b is smooth and continuous but the type II's SB_a may be extraneous—all known examples of SB_a have fully developed arms.

The complete sequence of regular nebulae, SB_a to SB_c, exhibits features which vary systematically throughout the entire range. The luminosities (absolute magnitudes) remain approximately constant but diameters increase and hence surface brightness decreases; when the arms are less distinct, and degree of resolution, which characterizes the spiral type, also changes continuously. The pinwheel system is primarily a late type normal spiral.
