

Democratic Capitalism and Morality in America

Topic: Economics | Words: 926 Pages: 3

The problem of the level of the salary in the modern world remains core in the economics in the condition of the free market. Considering the situation, when a famous movie star can earn as much as 60 million for a few weeks work, and a grade school teacher in Nebraska earns about 30,000 a year, the inequitable distribution of resources will be evaluated and the question will be answered whether the situation can be justified or not in the conditions of free market relations.

Being democratic county, government tries to care about people, who are occupied in the social professions, but still they usually care about the whole county's economy, which turns teachers' problem on the background (Haslett, 2001). The statistical evidences show that the standards of life have increased for all layers of population, if to look from the perspective of 2006. Moreover, during that year low- and middle class families' life was improved dramatically, that is the rough statistics. Coming to practice, only wealthy people felt the improvements in their incomes, while other layers of the population remained on the same level, even if their standards improved, they did not feel that (Sherk, 2006).

Michael Novak (2004) stated that living in the democratic society with free economy, people are eager to provide their economic initiatives and imagination with the aim to get more financial profit. The cinematography and famous movie stars in particular, use their potential and imagination in activities to gain more profit. The center of the modern life became the care of the environment and many famous
