British athletics in the era of Chariots of Fire is explored through the rediscovered life of amateur and professional runner and leading British coach Alec Nelson Though necessary for competitive success professional coaches were kept firmly in their place by the socially elite athletes and administrators of the sport The contradictions and hypocrisy within athletics and the class based antagonism between amateurism and professionalism are central themes of this book The relationship between professional trainers and amateur athletes and clubs is examined and the resistance to change while British Olympic performances increasingly fell behind The sporting world and its main personalities are brought to life through exploring the clubs Nelson coached Cambridge University the Army the Achilles Club and various Olympic teams the athletes he trained Harold Abrahams Douglas Lowe and Bob Tisdall among them and the controversies over the methods and role of coaches The book also brings to light a remarkable partnership which crossed the lines of social class between Nelson and his mentor Philip Noel Baker a prominent Olympian and politician who attempted to modernise British athletics Library of Congress Catalogs Library of Congress,1977

Catalogue of the Contents of Doe Run Lead Company's Museum, Doe Run, Missouri, July 1, 1912,1912 Marathon Japan Thomas R. H. Havens,2015-02-28 Japanese have been fervid long distance runners for many centuries Today on a per capita basis at least as many Japanese residents complete marathons each year as in the United States or any other country Marathon Japan is the first comprehensive English language chronicle of the history of this important part of Japanese sports culture It traces the development of distance racing beginning with the Stockholm Olympics of 1912 when the Japanese government used athletics and above all the marathon as a means to continue its late nineteenth century project of winning the respect of Western countries and achieving parity with the world powers The marathon soon became the first event in a Western derived sport in which Japanese proved consistently superior to athletes from other countries During the 1920s and 1930s Japanese runners regularly produced the fastest times in the world and twice in the period after World War Two in the 1960s and late 1970s 1980s Japanese men again dominated world marathoning Japanese women likewise emerged as some of the world's fastest in the 1990s and early 2000s. Meanwhile the general public took up distance running with enthusiasm starting in the 1960s and continuing unabated today symbolized most recently by massive open entry marathons in Tokyo, Osaka and other Japanese cities comparable in scale and challenge to major world races in Boston, New York, Chicago, London and Berlin. In this book Thomas Havens analyzes the origins, development and significance of Japan's century-long excellence in marathons and long distance relays (ekiden) as well as the reasons for the explosive growth of distance racing among ordinary citizens in more recent decades. He reveals the key role of commercial media companies in promoting sports especially marathons and ekidens from the 1910s to today and explains how running became a consumer commodity beginning in the 1970s as Japanese society matured into an age of capitalist affluence. What comes to light as well are the relentlessly nationalistic goals underlying government policies toward sports above all marathons where Japanese have been so successful throughout the modern era. The public craze for distance racing both watching and running has created a shared citizenship of civic participation among young and old male and female persons of every social background and level of education. The combination of speedy elite athletes and huge numbers of general citizen runners means that Japan today is truly a marathon nation. Marathon Japan will appeal to Japan specialists interested in modern cultural and social history. It will engage recreational runners in Japan and abroad as well as anyone interested in the history of sports.
