

PSYCHOSIS VERSUS NEUROSIS

Psychosis is defined as a major personality disorder which disrupts one's emotional and mental aspects of life

Results in a complete alteration of the personality with a considerable impairment or loss of insight

Patients often lose their touch with the reality with an absolute distortion of it, but they may not realize that they are not well

Psychotics need medications like antipsychotics which mainly act on their behavior, thoughts, and emotions

Neurosis refers to a constant struggle between an individual's personality and his patterns of behavior in a stressful condition, often associated with physical and mental disturbances

Results in a partial change in the personality along with a mild loss of insight

Patients know that they have been affected by a certain illness, so only a small external support will help them to overcome their condition

Neurotics may only require counseling, behavioral therapy and supportive measures to control their symptoms
