Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, the Federal Workforce, and the District of Columbia, United States. Congress. House. Committee on Homeland Security, 2012. FEMA within the Department of Homeland Security DHS employs a workforce of over 18,000 people who are responsible for leading and supporting the nation in preparing for, protecting against, responding to, recovering from, and mitigating all hazards. GAO reported in 2007 and 2011 that changes in FEMA's workforce workload and composition have created challenges in FEMA's ability to meet the agency's varied responsibilities and train its staff appropriately. GAO was asked to review FEMA's workforce planning and training efforts. This report addresses the extent to which FEMA has 1) integrated its workforce planning and training efforts, 2) incorporated strategic management principles into these efforts, and 3) systematically gathered workforce and training data to inform its human capital decisions. GAO reviewed relevant documentation that describes FEMA's agencywide workforce planning and training efforts such as the agency's strategic plan, reviewed and assessed FEMA's strategic planning documents, and interviewed DHS and FEMA program and regional office officials.
