talked or the hired man raising his head from over the apples could see from the kitchen door of Lemuel Fairchild's farmhouse. But any student of his species would have agreed that in all the uninviting View Milton was the least attractive object. As he rose to empty his pan within and start afresh he could be seen more fully. He was clumsily cased from neck to ankles in brown overalls threadbare, discoloured, patched with mud about the knees and ragged edges lower down. He wore rubber boots over the bulging legs of which the trousers came reluctantly, and the huge feet of these were slit down the instep. His hat had been soft and black once; now it seemed stiffened with dirt to which the afternoon milking had lent a new contribution of short reddish hair and was shapeless and colourless from age. His back was narrow and bent, and his long arms terminated in hands which it seemed sinful to have touch anything thereafter to be eaten. Viewed from behind Milton appeared to be at least fifty. But his face showed a somewhat younger man despite its sun-baked lines and the frowzy beard which might be either the yellow of unkempt youth or the gray of untidy age. In reality he was not yet thirty-six. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
