

Gender-Blindness in the Study of Nationalism

- Nationalism: 'it is hard to think of any political phenomenon which remains so puzzling and about which there is less analytic consensus' (Anderson 1996 in Mapping the Nation).
- Literature on nationalism has not been interested in questions of gender or the differential participation of women and men.
- Texts on nationalism that try to incorporate a gendered perspective usually just 'tack on' gender.

Nationalism And Gender:

Nationalism and Gender Chizuko Ueno, 2004 Ueno humanities and sociology U of Tokyo Japan explores interrelated issues of gender war history and public memory She first looks at Japanese women's support for aggressive war and their acceptance of the gender strategy for nationalizing women through mobilization She next turns to the discursive battle over the Japanese treatment of Feminist Time Against Nation Time Victoria Hesford, Lisa Diedrich, 2009-12-01 Feminist Time Against Nation Time offers a series of essays that explore the complex and oftentimes contradictory relationship between feminism and nationalism through a problematization of temporality Although there has been much recent discussion in the U S of the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq and the War on Terror as signaling a new period of permanent war feminist voices have not been at all prominent in this discussion This collection considers not only the ways in which public spaces for dissent are limited but also the ways in which the time for such dissent is cut short Feminist Time Against Nation Time combines philosophical examinations of Women's Time by Julia Kristeva and The Time of Thought by Elizabeth Grosz with essays offering case studies of particular events including Kelly Oliver's essay on the media coverage of the U S wars on terror and in Afghanistan and Iraq and Betty Joseph's on the anti colonial uses of women's time in the creation of nineteenth century Indian nationalism Feminist Time Against Nation Time juxtaposes feminist time against nation time in order to consider temporalities that are at once contrary to but also drawing toward each other Yet Hesford and Diedrich also argue that because as an untimely project feminism necessarily operates in a different temporality from that of the nation againstness is also used to provoke a rupture a momentary opening up of a disjuncture between the two that will allow us to explore the possibilities of creating a space and time for feminists to think against the current of the present moment

Reproductive and labour rights of women are of interest because they are mutually linked and reinforcing Firstly it is through reproduction policies and rhetoric that women are limited to their role in preserving the continuance of the nation In turn this serves the benefit of the demographic policies of ethnocracies It is important to note that it is through these policies that hierarchical and patriarchal structures are reinforced As a logical consequence this is supposed to have an impact on the enjoyment of women's labour rights because following this argumentation it is not in the interest of ethnocracies to involve women equally to men into paid labour but rather to reinforce their primary task of reproduction by discriminating them through certain policies related to the labour market This is why the aim of this research is to analyse how these specific politics and policies related to reproduction and labour have affected the enjoyment of certain women's human rights Therefore I will first review certain policies and politics of religious and nationalistic leaders to point out what initiatives they have undertaken in regards to women's reproductive rights Moreover the thesis will elaborate the enjoyment of women's social economic rights and cultural rights such as labour rights art 6 CESC and the right to family life art 10 CESC that are set in the International Covenant of Economic Social and Cultural Rights from 1966 Thus it will be of interest to see how women's participation in the labour market has developed within the framework of changing political ideology and whether we can see significant developments not only for the question of whether women are being employed but also about which types of labour women are carrying out
