esteem subscores General Self Social Self Home Parent Self School Academic Self the self esteem level of 51 volunteer participants were established Each participant was middle school aged Grades 6 8 and was a current student at a middle school in Middlesex County New Jersey Using a multiple regression these Coopersmith scores were individually compared to grades in core academic subjects Math ELA Science and Social Studies as well as NJSLA standardized assessment scores in Math and ELA The results varied for the different conducted tests Overall a correlation was not found to exist between NJSLA scores and self esteem as determined by the Coopersmith Self Esteem Inventory However there was a positive correlation found to exist between grades in core academic subjects and participant self esteem The correlation was not strong enough to be used as a predictor for individual student grades or self esteem level however a P value of greater than 95 for multiple Coopersmith subscores is indicative of a relationship between the two variables that is statistically significant This is evidence to suggest that as a whole middle school students with higher self esteem are also more likely to see an increase in academic success as well ProQuest abstract
