Melanchthon and Calvin on Confession and Communion Herman Speelman, 2016-01-18 Melanchthon and Calvin were late medieval people stemming from a world of order and unity and at the same time they fully lived in the early modern world in which everything was changing In this new world they committedly enthusiastically and restlessly sought to introduce some order in theory as well as practice The sixteenth century church was governed by multiple coercive constructions and systems Did the two Reformers really succeed in disconnecting themselves from them and to what extent did they connect to for example the existing forms of eucharistic piety The established church had come under serious criticism and people were massively turning their backs on the less than attractive ecclesiastical practices something connecting that era to ours In these highly turbulent and suspenseful 1520s when it was not yet clear whether the ten year old evangelical movement in Germany was still viable Melanchthon tried to introduce at least some order into the chaos by means of a confession accompanied by a church order As it turned out the new doctrine on Christian freedom and justification by faith alone was easily interpreted in a one sided manner Through a careful analysis of the sources Herman A Speelman examines Melanchthon's church visitations in 1527 and Calvin's five attempts to shape the modernisation of ecclesiastical life In addition to the gospel also penance and the preaching of the law received a place in the Protestant liturgy and spirituality Melanchthon's and Calvin's contributions were not only to have an enormous impact on the theological evolutions in the evangelical movement in Europe but they also proved to be of eminent importance for the way in which the new doctrine was given meaning in practice Their instructions continue to be highly influential in large parts of Europe today

extensive relationships with others and the context within which he wrote and taught What emerges is a man who devoted himself to the Church inspiring and transforming the lives of others especially those who suffered persecution for their religious beliefs

A Cultural History of Marriage in the Renaissance and Early Modern Age Joanne M. Ferraro, 2021-11-18

Why marry The personal question is timeless Yet the highly emotional desires of men and women during the period between 1450 and 1650 were also circumscribed by external forces that operated within a complex arena of sweeping economic demographic political and religious changes The period witnessed dramatic religious reforms in the Catholic confession and the introduction of multiple Protestant denominations the advent of the printing press European encounters and exchange with the Americas North Africa and southwestern and eastern Asia the growth of state bureaucracies and a resurgence of ecclesiastical authority in private life These developments together with social religious and cultural attitudes including the constructed norms of masculinity femininity and sexuality impinged upon the possibility of marrying The nine scholars in this volume aim to provide a comprehensive picture of current research on the cultural history of marriage for the years between 1450 and 1650 by identifying both the ideal templates for nuptial unions in prescriptive writings and artistic representation and actual practices in the spheres of courtship and marriage rites sexual relationships the formation of family networks marital dissolution and the overriding choices of individuals over the structural and cultural constraints of the time

Hopes for Better Spouses A. G. Roeber, 2013-06-13

Modern Protestant debates about spousal relations and the meaning of marriage began in a forgotten international dispute some 300 years ago The Lutheran Pietist ideal of marriage as friendship and mutual pursuit of holiness battled with the idea that submission defined spousal roles Exploiting material culture artifacts broadsides hymns sermons private correspondence and legal cases on three continents Europe Asia and North America A G Roeber reconstructs the roots and the dimensions of a continued debate that still preoccupies international Protestantism and its Catholic and Orthodox critics and observers in the twenty first century
