

2. WHAT IS SCREEN PRINTING?

When talking about the commercial design and the state of the contemporary (today's) technology, first it is a form of printing that is the most popular of this kind. Screen printing (also known as silkscreening) is usually a great mass production method. It is used to create posters, t-shirts, and other items. It is a very simple and easy to learn process. The design is first created on a screen, and then the ink is pushed through the screen onto the surface of the paper or fabric.

Four Different Types of Printing

Printing can be divided into four main types: offset, letter, gravure, and screen.

Offset and letter printing are the most common of the two. Offset printing is a process in which the design is first created on a plate, and then the ink is pushed through the plate onto the surface of the paper or fabric. Letter printing is a process in which the design is first created on a letter, and then the ink is pushed through the letter onto the surface of the paper or fabric. Gravure printing is a process in which the design is first created on a gravure, and then the ink is pushed through the gravure onto the surface of the paper or fabric.
