

A Review Article

ONE of the most conspicuous developments in the field of international organization since World War II has been the proliferation of regional organizations. In some respects, the post-war regional system could be regarded as an extended version of the concept of military alliance which is virtually as old as the institution of war between political communities; yet it is significantly different. The regional organizations not only cover security agreements but also deal with a broad range of economic, social and political problems. An additional difference is that the regional organizations are not only multilateral but also highly institutionalized in terms of regular meetings of the state-parties, operating budgets and a permanent secretariat staff. These regional groupings bear long and often awkward names including such traditional labels as "league", "organization" and "association" but they are increasingly getting supplemented by such designations as "community" and "union". Although sometimes more accurately reflecting aspirations than reality, the new nomenclature suggests the revolutionary impact of science and technology which has tied together all the peoples of the earth in an unprecedented intimacy of contact, interdependence of welfare and mutuality of vulnerability.

The proliferation of regional organizations indicate that although "one world" has not yet been achieved, there is no denying the existing reality of global interdependence. Indeed, the issue is : Are regional organizations preferable to the global ones for promoting international peace and security, economic and social well-being, human rights and other important goals sought by the international community? Are the activities of universal and regional organizations complementary or conflicting when they pursue their respective objectives in areas where their functions overlap?

A study, or rather a collection of studies, undertaken by the United Nations Institute of Training And Research (UNITAR), Regionalism and the United Nations,* provides enough material for scholars to find an answer to the question. This study, as is characteristic of all UNITAR publications, attempts no definite conclusions of its own. But an overall impression which one gets is that the two—global and regional organizations—are really complementary to each other. This is true to an extent, but the issues involved are too complex and related developments too tortuous to yield a simple answer.

Let us have a look at the United Nations Charter provisions and related developments during the last more than thirty years. To go into historical details would be too involved; nevertheless, the general aspects must be noted.

identify the specific conditions and junctures of different forms of region making in their external global and internal local national dimensions The volume also places special emphasis on interactions spatial entanglements and comparisons between regionalisms in different parts of the world By expanding beyond the perspective of North South transfers this book seeks to better understand the dynamics and diversity of interregional interactions This volume will appeal to scholars of global studies international political economy international relations human geography and development studies as well as area studies specialists who focus on Latin America and Africa

United Nations, Volumes I and II Sam Daws, Paul Taylor, 2020-10-11 The International Library of Politics and Comparative Government is an essential reference series which compiles the most significant journal articles in comparative politics over the past 30 years It makes readily accessible to teachers researchers and students an extensive range of essays which together provide an indispensable basis for understanding both the established conceptual terrain and the new ground being broken in the rapidly changing field of comparative political analysis These two volumes include articles which examine the system the structure the function and the future of the United Nations

Regional Organisations and the Development of Collective Security Ademola Abass, 2004-12 This book examines the development of collective security by regional organisations particularly after the Cold War It analyses the various constitutional developments that have occurred within regional arrangements such as ECOWAS African Union SADC OAS and NATO and critically analyses how these developments have propelled regional organisations to depart from the normative framework of regional arrangement contained in Chapter VIII of the UN Charter Through a comprehensive examination of practice the book evaluates the impact of regional organisations newly asserted powers to authorise enforcement action and determine when situations within member states warrant their intervention It inquires into the legal justifications for these developments both from within the UN Charter and regional treaties and practice and asks whether consensual intervention that is the use of force by regional organisations on the basis of their members consent contravenes or constitutes an exception to the prohibition of the use or threat of force under Article 2 4 of the Charter The book also analyses the regime of complementarity between the UN and regional organisations

Preferred Futures for the United Nations Saul Mendlovitz, Burns Weston, 2023-09-20 The authors here discern a humane impulse rising against the prevailing tendencies of market driven opportunism an impulse rapidly becoming manifest in international law With focus on the United Nations and the norms processes and institutions with which it responds to militarism and war poverty and maldevelopment ecological imbalance social justice and alienation they suggest workable initiatives and procedures through which relevant United Nations agencies might be reformed and or transformed to effectively meet the new challenges of the next century
