

PERSONAL STATEMENT FOR RESIDENCY

She was a 19-year-old lady with tuberculous meningitis. I vividly remember the sadness and lost hope registered by her relatives' faces. It was said that she could not respond to their verbal or tactile stimulations. The fear of losing a vibrant and promising member of the family was evident in their eyes. That was among my first clinical experiences during my first year of a postgraduate residency. I remember how determined I was to restore their smiles. Responses were slowly reappearing, and with time she started blinking. Soon, she was responding to the voices of her loved ones, and then her speech returned. For me, that was a priceless moment. The gratitude and praise that came after serve as my landmark memories. I was proud to be a key player in the team that analyzed the minutest details of her medical condition and found a solution to it.

As a doctor, I have always been comfortable fitting into a team setting. With my strong skills, in most cases, I took a leadership role, but even when I did not, I was happy to play my part for the overall success of the team and the patient. Being a great doctor for me means sending patients home happy and healthy. It is all about good patient-doctor relationships when they get admitted to differential diagnosis and eventual management plan. Having gone through rotations in other specialties, I chose internal medicine because it provides an avenue toward interaction with patients of all ages and backgrounds. I thrive through challenges, and as such, I am always eager to unravel tough medical conditions that may not manifest themselves in their usual ways. Internal medicine is a complex specialty that touches on every other specialization.

Considering my multitasking skills when dealing with complex internal medicine cases that require a personalized approach, I am sure not to get overwhelmed by perspective and thorough research. I am now ready to take my career development to the next level by joining an internal medicine residency program. My ideal program is intellectually stimulating and provides me with a friendly environment while nurturing my clinical acumen. I am interested in a program that guarantees well-structured academic exposure, which will help me develop the necessary skill set to manage patients professionally. In addition, I have a passion for research and would like to venture into academia later on to benefit the community and humanity.
